CHAPTER 8.0 –ANECDOTAL EVIDENCE SUMMARY

CHAPTER 8.0 – ANECDOTAL EVIDENCE SUMMARY

8.1 Introduction

This chapter describes the results of anecdotal information collected from personal interviews, public hearings and telephone surveys. The collection of personal accounts of incidents of discrimination and the analysis of this anecdotal information are important components of this Availability and Disparity Study (in brief reference, the "Study"). The information and analytical data provide a better understanding of the contracting culture within the Alaska Department of Transportation & Public Facilities (AKDOT&PF), Municipality of Anchorage (Municipality) and Alaska Railroad Corporation (ARRC) (collectively, the Agencies).

Courts have relied on anecdotal data in disparity studies as evidence of the existence of past and present discrimination. Regarding the use of anecdotal evidence, the Supreme Court explains, "Evidence of a pattern of individual discriminatory acts can, if supported by appropriate statistical proof, lend support to a local government's determination that broader remedial relief is justified." City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson Co, 488 U.S. 469, 509, 109 S.Ct. 706, 730 (1989). Courts have indicated that while anecdotal evidence alone is generally not sufficient to prove discrimination, combining accounts of specific incidents of discrimination with strong evidence of statistical disparities can provide a strong evidentiary basis to support a race- and gender-conscious program.

In applying Croson, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Western States Paving Co., Inc. v. Washington State Department of Transportation noted that "both statistical and anecdotal evidence of discrimination are relevant in identifying the existence of discrimination." 407 F.3d 983, 992 (9th Cir. 2005) (citing Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Slater ("Adarand VII"), 228 F.3d 1147, 1166 (10th Cir. 2000)). The Ninth Circuit criticized the Washington State Department of Transportation (WSDOT) for not introducing any anecdotal evidence of discrimination. During oral argument before the Ninth Circuit, WSDOT contended that the affidavits signed by applicants applying for DBE status provided evidence of discrimination within Washington. Addressing this evidence, the Court stated that the affidavits "do not provide any evidence of discrimination within Washington's transportation contracting industry … these affidavits do not require prospective DBEs to certify that they have been victims of discrimination in the contracting industry." Id. at 1002. The Court noted that the affidavits signed by the applicants for DBE status only required the business owners to certify that they had been subject to racial or ethnic prejudice or cultural bias or that they had suffered the effects of discrimination because they were a member of a minority group. Relying upon Croson, the Ninth Circuit stated, "Such claims of general societal discrimination—and even generalized assertions about discrimination in an entire industry—cannot be used to justify race-conscious remedial measures. Id. (citing Croson, 488 U.S. at 498).

In keeping with the legal precedent discussed above, the evidence of discrimination presented in this Chapter is compiled from 69 personal interviews with business owners within the state of Alaska, all of whom attested by affidavit to the experiences they described in the interviews. The evidence also includes testimony from business owners at four separate public hearings. Finally, the evidence includes the results of a telephone survey.

8.2 Methodology

Several methods were used to collect anecdotal data from individuals representing both DBE and non-DBE businesses. Specifically, personal interviews of DBE and non-DBE business owners, public hearings and a telephone survey were used to document specific incidents and patterns of discrimination. A detailed explanation of the process used to obtain evidence is discussed under each method.

To participate in the personal interviews and public hearings, business owners had to have conducted business with or attempted to conduct business with one of the Agencies or they had to have acted as a subcontractor on a project administered by one of the Agencies during the relevant study period. During the personal interviews, the interviewer asked each business owner to comment upon business that they conducted or attempted to conduct with the participating Agencies during the relevant study period. Business owners who participated in the public hearings were asked to restrict their comments to examples concerning projects administered by one of the participating Agencies. Also, each business that participated in either the personal interviews or the public hearings was located in the state of Alaska and maintained an Alaska business license.

Public Hearings

Four public hearings were conducted by Fields & Brown, LLC to receive testimony and exhibits relevant to the Agencies' DBE programs and to DBE participation in construction, professional services, general services and commodities contracting for one of the participating Agencies. Two hearings were held in Anchorage, one hearing was held in Fairbanks and one hearing was held in Juneau. The first hearing in Anchorage was held on March 20, 2007 at the Z. J. Loussac Library in the Assembly Chambers. Seven individuals attended the hearing and three individuals testified. The Juneau hearing was held on March 22, 2007 at the Tlingit Haida Vocational Training/Resource Center. One individual attended the hearing and testified. The first Anchorage hearing and the Juneau hearing were advertised in the Sunday editions of the Anchorage Daily Newspaper and the Juneau Empire, and advertising spots were purchased on radio stations KSKA & KNBA in Anchorage and KTOO in Juneau. The hearings were also advertised on the community/events web pages for both newspapers and the community/events webpage for KSKA and KTOO. The hearing officers also attempted to establish a hearing panel to assist in receiving testimony for the first two hearings. Various business and community leaders were contacted in Anchorage and Juneau, including the executive director for the Alaska Association of General Contractors (AGC). One person served on the panel for the March 20, 2007 Anchorage hearing: Teresa Smith, Executive Director of the Alaska 8(a) Association. The hearing panel for the Juneau hearing consisted of the following individuals: Tara Jollie, Deputy Commissioner for the State of Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development; Teresa Germain, Job Developer/Tribal Employment Rights Officer for the Central Council of the Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska; and Mike McKinnon of McKinnon & Associates.

The hearing officers determined that the method of advertising did not reach enough of the business community; therefore, a second hearing was conducted in Anchorage. Advertising for the second Anchorage hearing and the Fairbanks hearing was approached differently. To advertise these hearings, direct email solicitations were sent to all businesses contacted to participate in personal interviews. Three separate email messages were sent to businesses in Fairbanks and in Anchorage. Also, the hearings were publicized on the Events Page on the webpage of the AKDOT&PF's Civil Rights Office and the Online Public Notice page for the State of Alaska. The second Anchorage hearing was conducted on May 21, 2007 in the Z.J. Loussac Library in the Wilda Marston Theatre. No hearing panel was established for the second Anchorage hearing. Nine individuals attended the hearing and three individuals testified. The Fairbanks hearing was held on May 22, 2007 at the Springhill Suites Marriott Hotel. No hearing panel was established for the Fairbanks hearing. One individual attended and testified. While this method of advertising did not produce better attendance at the hearings, it was apparent to the hearing officers that the target audience was better reached as several business owners asked about the success of the hearings during individual interviews.

Individuals in attendance at the public hearings were asked to sign in and were given speaker instructions and a Speaker's Card to complete. The speaker instruction sheet provided additional information regarding the parameters of the testimony to be provided.

If an individual was interested in speaking at the hearing and met the criteria to present testimony, then the individual completed the Speaker's Card before presenting testimony. The cards were collected, given to the Hearing Officers and added as exhibits to the hearing transcript.

A total of eight DBE and non-DBE business owners presented testimony at four public hearings. A total of six business owners presented testimony in Anchorage. In both Juneau and Fairbanks, one business owner presented testimony. One of the business owners presented testimony at both Anchorage hearings.

When each hearing opened, Carla Fields provided opening comments addressing the legal background for the Disparity Study, the components of the Study and the role of the hearing participants in establishing a factual record for the anecdotal portion of the Study.

The participants were then instructed to provide specific testimony regarding any incidents of discrimination they experienced in conducting business with one of the participating Agencies. As part of the hearing testimony, each speaker was required to provide complete identification, including the speaker's name, represented firm, the speaker's ethnic or gender group and the firm's certification status. After each speaker's testimony, the Hearing Officers and members of the panel (if present) asked questions to clarify the testimony. A court reporter recorded the proceedings at each of the hearings.

Telephone Survey of Firms

The telephone survey was conducted by Southeast Strategies between May and July 2007. Best practice procedures were followed in developing, testing and collecting the survey data.

Identification of Business Contact Data Resources

Southeast Strategies researched state government and Alaska municipalities who might have databases containing information on Alaska businesses. Key agencies, such as the Alaska Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development's business license section and Buy Alaska program, the City of Fairbanks, the City and Borough of Juneau, the Juneau Economic Development Council and the University of Alaska Procurement Technology Assistance Center, were contacted regarding available databases.

Survey Development

Southeast Strategies reviewed the draft instrument developed by the project team for the telephone survey of businesses and made recommendations for minor changes. Additional changes were recommended after the survey pretest was performed. Most of the changes to the survey instrument were small adjustments to wording to facilitate understanding by the respondent.

Reviewed Business Contact Databases

Southeast Strategies reviewed the project team's databases of business contacts for consistency with their general knowledge of Alaska businesses. They recommended additional research where databases were missing businesses known to be minority or woman owned.

Survey Pretest

Southeast Strategies developed a format for recording telephone survey responses and performed a telephone survey pretest using databases obtained by the project team.

Thirty calls were made and nine surveys were successfully completed. One survey was begun but aborted because the business owner did not speak English well and there was a barrier to his understanding of the questions. Results of the pretest were forwarded to the project team statistician for review.

The pretest indicated that:

- Business owners and managers were difficult to contact because it was approaching construction season and many of the businesses in the database were related to the construction industry.
- Respondents were eager to answer the surveys and few refusals occurred.
- If the business owner was not available, a business manager or financial manager was usually able to answer the survey questions adequately.

As a result of the pretest, if a business owner was not available, other knowledgeable parties such as business or financial managers were allowed to respond. Some minor adjustments were made to the wording of the survey questionnaire to further facilitate understanding.

Survey Administration

Southeast Strategies researched, contacted and interviewed several survey firms with the ability to administer and record results of the telephone surveys. Three firms were selected for further consideration and additional interviews were held and quotes for the work were solicited. Consumer Opinion Services (COS), based in Seattle, Washington with a calling center located in Portland, Oregon, was chosen to perform the surveys.

Southeast Strategies worked with COS to conduct the telephone surveys and to record the results in a format requested by the project team statistician. Southeast Strategies worked with the project team to obtain and clean up databases with an adequate number of contacts for COS to complete the desired number of surveys. In addition, they monitored COS's performance and addressed concerns as they arose.

COS began making calls in mid-May of 2007. The initial two databases with about 1,038 business contacts were exhausted and calling was halted in early June. An additional database with about 4,600 contacts was forwarded to COS on June 21, 2007 and surveying continued. COS completed 499 surveys and the survey responses were reviewed and forwarded to the team statistician for analysis on July 9, 2007.

COS reported that during performance of the survey, 5,314 calls were made, including multiple callbacks trying to reach the business owners. Of the calls made, 110 were disconnected phone numbers, 148 were wrong numbers and 44 were fax numbers. 499 surveys were completed and 106 respondents refused to complete the survey. Average completed interview time was 11 minutes and 45 seconds.

Minor modifications were made to the wording of the survey instrument after the fielding of the survey had begun to facilitate understanding by the respondents.

Initially, COS stated their company name and location (Portland, Oregon) during the introduction to the survey. This caused some confusion, especially since financial and other sensitive questions were asked of the respondents. The introduction was reworded to use Southeast Strategies' company name and location in Alaska.

Personal Interviews

One-on-one personal interviews were also conducted to elicit examples of specific incidents of discrimination on the basis of ethnicity and gender. The Wilson Group provided an interview guide that covered a range of questions concerning a firm's experiences conducting business with the Agencies, experiences contracting with general contractors on the Agencies' projects, the firm's business operations and instances of discrimination.

In collecting anecdotal evidence relevant to the existence of discriminatory practices, the interviewers were as objective as possible in selecting the participants, drafting interview questions, asking questions during the interviews and eliciting follow-up responses from individuals. The interviewers made no attempts to prompt or guide the testimony or responses of individuals but they tried to identify any unrecognized or acknowledged discriminatory practices within the relevant market area.

The Wilson Group provided Fields & Brown, LLC with several different contact lists of business owners to assist in scheduling personal interviews. The contact lists included the following: the Alaska 8(a) Association membership list, including 87 businesses; the Alaska Unified Certification Program (AUCP) spreadsheet from the February 2007 meeting, including 30 businesses; the Alaska Association of General Contractors (AGC) membership list, including 592 businesses; the AKDOT&PF DBE Directory, including 254 businesses; and a Juneau vendor database list created by the Wilson Group, including 91 businesses. Each list included the name of the business, business classification, contact name, email address, phone number, fax number and mailing address.

Fields & Brown initially separated each list by the location of the business owner and then created three separate lists that combined the businesses located in the metropolitan areas of Anchorage, Fairbanks and Juneau. Fields & Brown then contacted each business by faxing a letter requesting participation in the disparity study by means of a personal interview. With the initial letter, Fields & Brown forwarded a letter signed by the AKDOT&PF Civil Rights Manager, explaining the purpose of the study and the importance of participating in a personal interview.

Fields & Brown called all the businesses that received faxed letters within three days to attempt to schedule interviews. Each business owner who scheduled an interview received a confirmation letter from Fields & Brown sent on the same day that the interview was arranged.

Fields & Brown also sent those businesses a reminder letter one to two days before the interview. During this scheduling process, Fields & Brown attempted contact with each business two to three times.

The goal was to conduct a total of 60 interviews. Interviewers from Fields & Brown conducted interviews in Alaska during three separate trips. The first trip was to Anchorage on February 21-23, 2007. Eight personal interviews were conducted during this trip with no cancellations. The second trip was to Anchorage on March 19-21, 2007 and Juneau on March 22-23, 2007.

Twenty personal interviews were conducted in Anchorage during this trip with four cancellations. Fifteen interviews were conducted in Juneau with one cancellation. The third trip was to Anchorage on May 21, 2007 and Fairbanks on May 22-24, 2007. Five interviews were conducted in Anchorage with no cancellations and twenty-three interviews were conducted in Fairbanks with two cancellations. A total of seventy-one interviews were conducted.

The results of 69 interviews are included in the interview findings. The results of two interviews were not included because the services provided by the businesses were not appropriate for the study in that the companies did not attempt to conduct business with any of the participating agencies.

The contacted firms represented a cross section of firms in construction, professional services and procurement areas. A total of 40 DBE firms were interviewed from the following racial/ethnic groups: two African American firms, eleven Native American/Alaska Native firms, two Asian firms, five Hispanic firms, twelve women owned firms and eight Alaska Native Corporations (“ANC”). The remaining twenty-nine firms interviewed were owned by Caucasian male owned firms.

Each interview was held on-site at each owner’s office or at a location selected by the owner. The interviews averaged one hour in length. Each interview was recorded on tape and later transcribed. Before each interview business owners were informed that their responses to the questionnaire would be confidential and would not be distributed to any other firm with their identity revealed, except in the event of a legal action, when all documentation would be provided to the court. At the conclusion of the interviews, business owners were asked to sign an affidavit attesting that the information provided during the interview was freely given, true and not coerced and that it reflected the firms' procurement experiences with the participating Agencies.

8.3 Anectodatal Analysis

Business Characteristics

The interview instrument included questions designed to establish a business profile for each business interviewed. From the interview, information was gathered concerning the primary line of business, number of years each firm has been in business, organizational structure, gross revenues and firm size.

Primary Line of Business

The following chart summarizes data concerning the primary line of business for the firms interviewed.

Interview Question: Primary Line of Business
	Race/Ethnicity or Gender Category of Business Owner
	African American	ANC	Native American/ Alaska Native	Asian	Hispanic	Caucasian Women	Caucasian Men
Construction	2	6	7		3	5	19
Architecture/ Engineering			1	1		1	3
Professional Services		1	1			2	1
Commodities and Supplies			1			3
Miscellaneous/ Other Services	0	1	1	1	2	1	6

The categories are (i) construction (which included general contractors and all subcontractors that perform services related to the following construction areas: building, highway, bridge, rail or marine); (ii) architecture/engineering; (iii) professional services, including all professional / consulting services except architecture/engineering; (iv) commodities and supplies; and (v) miscellaneous/other services.

Of the firms interviewed, fifty-seven percent were in one of the construction areas; seven percent were in the architecture/engineering category; nine percent were in the professional services category; four percent were in the commodities and supplies category; and twenty-three percent were in the other services category.

Years in Business

The next chart represents the number of years in business by ethnicity of the firms interviewed.

Interview Question: Number of Years in Business
	Race/Ethnicity or Gender Category of Business Owner
	African American	ANC	Native American/ Alaska Native	Asian	Hispanic	Caucasian Women	Caucasian Men
0-10 years	1	2	4	1	3	4	9

21-30 years	1	2	2	1	1		8
31-40 years		1	1			1	1
41-50 years							2
50 + years						2	3

Seventy percent of the DBE firms interviewed have been in business twenty years or less. Fifty-two percent of the non-DBE firms have been in business twenty years or less. Twenty percent of the non-DBE firms interviewed have been in business over thirty years. Twelve and a half percent of the DBE firms interviewed have been in business for more than thirty years.

Organizational Structure

As reflected in the chart below, a large majority the firms interviewed were either corporations or limited liability corporations.

	African American	ANC	Native American/ Alaska Native	Asian	Hispanic	Caucasian Women	Caucasian Men

Gross Revenues

The following chart summarizes the data obtained regarding gross revenues for 2005. The Chart produced some interesting trends. None of the African American, Asian or Hispanic firms interviewed had gross revenues in excess of $3,000,000.00 for 2005 and only thirty-six percent of the Native American/Alaska Native firms had gross revenues in excess of $3,000,000.00 for 2005. However, of the Caucasian male owned firms and ANCs, over sixty-two percent of the ANCs and fifty-five percent of the Caucasian male owned firms had gross revenues in excess of $3,000,000.00 for 2005.

Interview Question: Gross Revenues for 2005
	Race/Ethnicity or Gender Category of Business Owner
	African American	ANC	Native American/ Alaska Native	Asian	Hispanic	Caucasian Women	Caucasian Men

Firm Size

Because of the seasonal nature of the construction industry in Alaska, the number of full-time seasonal employees was included in the firms' overall number of employees. It is interesting to note that, regardless of the race/ethnicity or gender of the business owner, the vast majority of businesses interviewed had fifty or fewer full-time employees. Seven and a half percent of the DBE firms interviewed had over fifty full-time employees and almost fourteen percent of the Caucasian male owned firms interviewed had over fifty full time employees.

Interview Question: Excluding Self, Number of Employees
	Race/Ethnicity or Gender Category of Business Owner
	African American	ANC	Native American/ Alaska Native	Asian	Hispanic	Caucasian Women	Caucasian Men
0-10	1	4	4	1	3	8	8
11-50	1	3	4	1	2	4	17
51-75			2				1
Over 75		1					3
No Response			1

Comparison of DBE and Non-DBE Demographics

Even though the DBE and non-DBE firms interviewed are similar in size, the non-DBE firms generally had higher gross revenues and had been in business longer than the DBE firms.

While over ninety-two percent of the DBE firms interviewed and almost eighty-seven percent of the non-DBE firms maintained fifty or fewer employees, none of the African American, Asian or Hispanic firms interviewed had been in business more than thirty years. Only one ANC and one Native American/Alaska Native firm had been in business more than thirty years. Twenty percent of the non-DBE firms have been in business more than thirty years.

Regarding gross revenues, none of the African American, Asian or Hispanic firms had gross revenues in excess of $3,000,000.00 and only thirty-six percent of the Native American/Alaska Native firms had gross revenues in excess of $3,000,000.00. However, over sixty-two percent of the ANCs and fifty-five percent of the Caucasian male owned firms had gross revenues in excess of $3,000,000.00 for 2005.

It is important to note that while demographics of the ANCs interviewed were more closely aligned with the other ethnic minority DBEs in the areas of firm size and years in business, they were certainly more aligned with the Caucasian male owned firms in gross revenues. Also, the Caucasian women owned firms' demographics in the area of firm size are more closely aligned with the other DBEs; however, almost forty-two percent of the Caucasian women owned firms interviewed had gross revenues in excess of $3,000,000.00 and twenty-five percent of the firms had been in business more than thirty years.

Barriers to Obtaining Anecdotal Testimony

The contracting climate in Alaska presented several barriers to obtaining anecdotal testimony for this study. The staff at Fields & Brown encountered problems while attempting to schedule interviews. First, there were a limited number of certified DBEs performing work in the categories being considered for this Study. In Anchorage there were 134 certified DBEs, in Fairbanks there were 23 certified DBEs and in Juneau there were 11 certified DBEs. Initially, the interviewers at Fields & Brown planned to conduct twenty personal interviews in each city. Once it was determined that the number of DBEs available to interview was limited in Fairbanks and Juneau, it was decided that the interviewers would target thirty interviews in Anchorage and fifteen interviews in Fairbanks and Juneau. Because of the limited number of DBEs in Fairbanks and Juneau, several interviews conducted in those cities were with non-DBEs. The interviewers' greatest pool of non-DBEs was obtained from the AGC's mailing list.

The willingness of business owners to participate in personal interviews varied significantly among the three cities. Business owners in Anchorage were very willing to participate.

The business owners were friendly when called upon by staff at Fields & Brown and expressed a willingness to participate even when they were not available during the time the interviewers were scheduled to be in Anchorage. The business owners were responsive and returned telephone calls and email requests promptly. In Fairbanks, the attitude of the business owners was similar to that in Anchorage. While not quite as responsive as the business owners in Anchorage, the business owners in Fairbanks also returned telephone calls and email messages promptly. The interviewers conducted interviews in Fairbanks in late May. There were several complaints from business owners indicating that it was the beginning of their busy season. Despite that fact, interviews were scheduled and the business owners kept the scheduled appointments.

The climate in Juneau was significantly less favorable than the climate in Anchorage and Fairbanks. Staff at Fields & Brown was met with hostility when they contacted business owners in Juneau. Several businesses would not provide fax numbers or email addresses to Fields & Brown so that general information about the Study and the interviews could be provided to the owners. Generally, business owners in Juneau would not return telephone calls or email messages. When staff members at Fields & Brown were able to discuss the Study with business owners, many of them indicated that the study and the DBE goals were a waste of time and the taxpayers' dollars.

Despite some of the issues scheduling interviews, it should be noted that members of the AGC showed a particular interest in this Study. AGC members were interested in conducting personal interviews and appeared to be knowledgeable about the Study and interested in the Study findings. AGC members were interested in their opinions being part of the Study results and therefore testified at the public hearings in Anchorage and conducted personal interviews.

During the personal interviews many DBEs expressed concern about whether they would be ostracized from the majority contracting community if it was determined that they discussed negative experiences contracting with the prime contractors. They advised that the contracting community is small in Alaska and if they were alienated they did not have the option of going to a bordering state to conduct business as they perceived you could in the lower 48 states. For example, an officer of an ANC that provides professional services stated during a personal interview:

> The Alaska construction community is very small, recognizing that there is the informal network that exists. There are other contractors out there that do what we do and if we got the reputation of making waves, I think the discrimination would be covert but pretty severe.

The owner of another company expressed concern about conducting the personal interview. The owner stated:

> I have grave concerns with talking to you right now. The only good thing is that I'm old and only have so many years left to work. But I'm not invincible. I live in this community and I would still like to work for the next ten years or something. But I'm sure there's going to be retaliation against me.

Because of these concerns, caution has been taken to insure that businesses cannot be identified based upon the owners' statements. This report will not provide business owners names, specifics about the type of work their company performs or the city where the firm is located. At most, the firms will be identified by the race/ethnicity or gender of the owner and the general business category. Specific project names identified by business owners also will not be included in this report.

Specific Incidents of Discrimination

Bid Shopping and Good Faith Efforts

The most pervasive and widespread complaint found among DBEs of almost every ethnic / gender group was that majority prime contractors used unfair methods to comply with the AKDOT&PF's bidding procedures, particularly the good faith efforts requirement. DBEs allege that the bidding policies for construction contracts, as written by the AKDOT&PF and as implemented by majority contractors, have a disparate and discriminatory impact on DBEs. Under the existing bidding procedures, prime contractors, who are almost exclusively white, are required to contact DBEs in an attempt to meet the DBE subcontracting goals established for the contracts. The prime contractors fax invitations to bid to the DBE subcontracting companies requesting either a bid or an indication that the DBE is not interested in submitting a bid. During interviews, the DBE subcontractors consistently complained that the prime contractors were attempting only to create the appearance of making required good faith efforts and were not legitimately interested in entering into subcontracting agreements with DBEs. DBEs complained that prime contractors would send faxes that did not provide adequate time for DBEs to respond.

DBEs also complained that they received faxes requesting bids for services that they did not provide. They also complained that they would receive harassing telephone calls demanding a response to the bid request. These consistent and pervasive practices used by prime contractors create barriers to contracting by subcontractors.

An officer of a certified DBE ANC that has provided professional services for nearly thirty years discussed his experience with the good faith efforts solicitations:

With regard to the DBE selection process, the good faith effort of the primes, in some cases, I have the impression it's going through the motions and not truly invested in the spirit of the program. We get solicitations quite often from contractors that are asking us to bid on work that we are not listed for. I can't say they know for sure that we're not in that line of business but it strikes me as very odd that they would send us the request other than that we are on the DBE list.

> Follow up question: Do you ever send those requests back saying that this is not an area you bid in?
> Yes, I always respond to them.
> Follow up question: Yet they still continue to come?
> Yes, they will still contact us. The contractors that we have been doing business with for years and know us, that's not the case. Most of the time we contact them on the large contracts with a sub-quote. It's rare that they would contact us for a bid that I didn't know about already.

The owner of a certified Alaska Native architectural & engineering firm explained how general contractors obtain bid information from DBEs only to meet their good faith efforts requirements and then hire other companies. In a personal interview he stated:

> We get faxes because we are on a list to receive them from generals. A lot of them do that only because they have to, not because they want to. We have submitted a bid as part of a small amount of engineering work as a subcontract and the prime that ended up winning, we never got called back on it. They hired the people that they always wanted to work with anyway. We were just a formality that they had to go through to say they solicited bids from these companies and I've had these people tell me that on the phone. They've told me the only reason why they sent this stuff to me was because they had to. They are under no obligation to hire us even if we win the bid. We don't have a contract, we just submitted a bid.

A WBE construction specialty contractor also discussed in a personal interview how contractors only request bid information from DBEs to meet their good faith efforts requirements. She commented that she received harassing telephone calls from contractors seeking information only to show the agencies that they tried to solicit bids from DBEs. She explained:

> Because right now I get a ton of faxes from contractors throughout the state, generally male owned, you know larger companies and they'll say "are you planning > on submitting a bid on this" you know and a few times I have and its just you know it's a waste of my time. I mean and they'll tell you when they call you, and I'm always good about faxing because when you get these harassing phone calls that say we need to know that you got this and we need to know if you're biding on it because we have to let these agencies know that we actually did this that we tried to contact. I've never seen a DBE on 90 percent of these jobs.

> Follow up question: So they let you know that they are soliciting you because of the DBE goal?
> Yeah, but they just need the paperwork essentially. It's not like gosh, we'd really like for you to bid or we want to work with you on this project. It's like we have to complete that paperwork so that we can let them know that we tried.

A certified DBE owner who has provided professional services for 15 years comments that she often received solicitations not relevant to her company. She stated:

> Because I'm listed in the DBE book statewide, there are DBE requirements; my fax machine goes off in the middle of night. It's contractors wanting solicitations on projects that have nothing to do with environmental engineering just so they say they contacted me. And that happens frequently over the years. I've tried to stop it and I haven't gotten too many lately.

Another business owner commented on the good faith efforts made by general contractors. This particular business owner, an Alaska Native, believes the good faith efforts are not being met fairly. He commented:

> I think there are unfair practices in bidding for the prime to meet these good faith efforts. The primes are not following the procedures as they should be. They fax us stuff and attempt contact with us but they never intend to use us. They just do it because of the good faith effort. They don't personally ever call us to speak to us, they just fax stuff.

Many of the Caucasian owned general contracting companies also expressed frustration regarding the good faith efforts requirements. In many cases, the general contractors discussed the increased costs associated with attempting to meet the good faith efforts requirements. Many indicated that the process should be revised by the agencies to remove some of the burden from the general contractors and place it on the DBE subcontractors. They also expressed frustration regarding what they perceived to be inaccuracies in the DBE directory concerning the contracting areas for certified DBEs.

An officer of a large Caucasian owned general contracting construction company discussed some of the problems with the AKDOT&PFs good faith efforts process as it relates to determining DBE availability:

> We feel that the whole good faith effort process for the DOT needs improvement. Overall the way the goals are set, monitored and the certification process of credible or available DBEs and their availability and capacity to complete the work and number of projects they can undertake needs to be reviewed more closely by the civil rights office.
> We are very seasonal so a lot of our work comes at once and the number of actual responsible responsive bidders that routinely get our work fill up real quick. There are only a limited number of those that know when to stop bidding and say enough is enough and I believe firmly that no one takes that into account when it comes to a solicitation that comes out after that time frame, that list of DBE subs doesn't change and the goals are very seldom taken into account and that's when it becomes a risk for both the contractor and the civil rights group in procurement to review these efforts. It's costing tax payers money because of that.
> We have no problem with the DBE goals and meeting those goals as a major general contractor, we just think that the system in itself needs to be polished. We have felt that many times our concerns have gone unnoticed.
> Follow up question: You mentioned the availability and capacity of DBE's is an issue from a seasonal perspective. Could you explain that a little bit better?
> The DOT, historically, doesn't come out with their work until very late in the year because of their funding cycle, numerous other things, which is very frustrating. We would like to be bidding all winter long and start work in the spring. But as it is, the work comes in a big chunk real close to the spring and before you know it you have to get right to work. It's the same for the DBE subs. They sit around all winter very anxious to know what their work load is going to be. Then all of the sudden, 10 projects come out to bid at once and they might have proposals out to many different organizations, it might be public or private, and then before you know it, you're loaded up on a lot of work. They have to bounce their resources from one corner of our state to the other.

Another Caucasian owned general contracting company expressed frustration regarding the good faith efforts solicitation process. During a personal interview, he discussed the redundancy of the process he goes through in attempt to contact DBEs. He stated:

> The biggest problem is with the DBE program. You have to solicit minority subcontractors. We find out that most people on the list don't have a clue about what's coming up or are interested or have the ability and we find that the responsible minority subcontractor already knows what's going on and already have a job. We go through a lot of paperwork just to fill in the blank.

> It's just a lot of redundancy, you have to fax them a thing if they want to bid. If we don't hear from them, I send a second request and follow up from them. We don't get responses back. If I send out a dozen, I only hear back from one or two of them. If they're serious about working for the City, they'll have their stuff together and get back to us.

A Caucasian owned general contracting company discussed the burden placed on the general contractor in making good faith efforts. He expressed the desire that some of the burden be shared with the DBE. This contractor stated, when asked the question, “how much of a burden is the DBE reporting requirement?”

> It's not bad doing it, but all the burden is placed on the contractor because you have these people who have signed up for the program who are in the book that we are supposed to contact them and all the burden is on us. We have to contact them once, if we don't hear anything back, we have to contact them a second time. Then finally you get a hold of them on the phone and they get mad at you for sending all these faxes all the time or they have changed their phone numbers and haven't notified the DBE office. All the burden is on the contractor and I think they should be forced to respond to these faxes. They signed up for the program and marked the box "yes, please contact me". That was most of our headache.

Another Caucasian owned large general contracting company discussed problems with meeting the good faith efforts. Particularly, this business has encountered inaccurate information in the DBE directory, in that the DBEs do not do the type of work listed. He described the following:

> In the DBE program it would probably be finding enough qualified people to make the goals. It seems like we used to be able to find qualified folks but anymore, I don’t know what it is that we just don’t get the bids from them. There are so many people that are on the list and you send it out to them and I don’t know how many times they respond. I’ve had people respond that they don’t do that kind of work, well you are on the list to do that, how come you are not doing it. I’ve ran into that a lot.
> Best faith effort is kind of expensive. In the last 2-3 years it has been harder to find people to fill the jobs. We’ve learned the hard way to set ourselves up to be prepared for the faith efforts in case we can’t get it. It’s hard to have enough of a pool to draw from to meet some of the projects goals. The listing provided by the DOT is not always accurate. Sometimes the goals interfere with the actual work that the contractor is suppose to do.

When asked what the agencies can do to improve this process the contractor stated:

> I just think evaluate the projects a little more thoroughly. I know that they have goals from their funding agencies to meet but they need to evaluate a project by project a little bit more closely. What the subcontractable items are and hence what the goals could be. But maybe they aren’t allowed to do that. I would like to see a little bit more dedication from somebody that is knowledgeable within the organization when they go to set the goals and the subcontractable items. Make it realistic; make it > something that we can meet. It is common knowledge what DBEs are active and what they do and when you start getting outside what the capacities are within the state, that's when we see the problems.

A Caucasian subcontractor indicated that prime contractors are concerned that they will not meet the good faith effort requirements and therefore obtain a DBE to ensure their chances of obtaining contracts.

> We find a lot of times that prime contractors are afraid to submit a good faith effort in lieu of just including the DBE on their sub lists of subcontractors because the Department is pretty hard on good faith effort. You've got a $20 million contract potentially sitting there on the table and you might get it taken away because you submit a good faith effort but didn't dot the i or cross the t. You're going to go out and get the DBE covered.

The practice of bid shopping is another area that has a disparate impact on DBE subcontractors who attempt to contract on projects administered by one of the agencies. Under the existing bidding procedures for all three agencies, prime contractors are not required to list their DBE subcontractors until after the lowest bidder is determined. The apparent low bidder is given five days to list the subcontractors who will perform on the project. DBEs state that this practice is discriminatory in that it promotes bid shopping.

DBEs are required to bid against each other within a very short time frame without adequate information. Majority contractors are generally given ample time and detailed specifications to prepare their bids. DBEs, on the other hand, are given limited time to render significant bids. These practices often result in DBEs performing contracts at a loss or with marginal profits.

During personal interviews, several business owners discussed the impact bid shopping has on the small disadvantaged business. When asked what the agencies could do to address the problem of bid shopping, an Alaska Native owned environmental company stated:

> Publish the bids with the subcontractors that were chosen on bid day. That would go a long way to clean up the business. If someone did have a good buddy and they were going to be putting to everybody else, they kind of have to let you know. It would be on the street, it would be published and fairer.

A Caucasian owned construction specialty contractor also addressed the issue of what the agencies could do to improve the problem of bid shopping. The contractor stated:

> They could do away with the 5 days to list subcontractors. All that is an opportunity for monkey business after the bid openings by the primes. If you don't do your pre-bid diligence, you have 5 days to figure out to what to do. If you're actually the low bidder, that's terribly unfair in my opinion. It produces shopping. I suggest subcontractor listing at bid time to reduce and to eliminate the temptation to bid shop.

An African American owned construction specialty contractor who has at least 31 years of experience discussed the impact bid shopping has on his business operations. This contractor has attempted to serve as a prime contractor on all three of the participating agencies projects but has never been awarded a prime contract during the study period. He was awarded at least 26 subcontracts with the AKDOT&PF and at least 11 subcontracts with the Municipality during the study period. He stated:

> An example is from the subcontracting standpoint, if I was to submit a number to a general. Typically, when that general gets the job, the general would know that day which subs he went into the job with. Typically, whenever the general can't tell you that he went in with your number, typically it's pretty logical to assume its being shopped. Because you could talk to some generals that maybe didn't get the job but they can tell you that they went in with your number.
> One of the main simple things that the agencies can do, they can require generals to submit a subcontractors list within a certain period of time of who they are going to be using on that job. They know that when they bid the job and even though they may not be using goals, if a minority puts in a number and that number is in fact the lowest responsive bid, then unless that general can substantiate that that minority is bidding a job in such a way that's so far out that its going to hurt him, then I think that minority should be on that list before that job is actually let. Once it leaves that bid opening and they don't know who those subs are, that's when the good old boy network kicks in. I've been told by a few general contractors that we were the lowest responsive bidder, the one that eventually got it has indicated that it was between myself and one other guy. Since that time, I've not been able to contact that general contractor. And it has been my experience that when that is happening, it's being shopped.

A DBE construction specialty contractor shared his experience with bid shopping. He discussed a job that he was not awarded, even though he was the low bidder:

> With a DOT job, bidding as a subcontractor, we were low with everybody, except for this particular contractor who got the job, he moved his subcontractor to whoever he liked, regardless of price. We've had problems interpreting a lot of this and not exactly sure if this is only related to the general contractor or the subcontractors who are actually looking at it. We made calls on several times and ended up at a dead end. It was a job that really frustrated us because not only were we low, we have the DBE work order and we were still told that it didn't even matter.

A woman-owned DBE specialty subcontractor that has been in business 7 years reported that she has had problems with bid shopping as well and feels there is no accountability for this since the DBE goals have been suspended:

> [F]airly recently I had a bid out as well on a project and I know I was low because I was getting calls from every contractor that was bidding that day and I got a few calls from the contractor that actually won the project and I knew that I was low by a good percentage.
> After the job went out and I found out who won the bid I called that contractor five, six times, to the contractor that was actually running the job, the project manager. When I didn't get any response, from him, I called the contract administrator, the one who receives the bids and couldn't get any answers there.
> And finally I had to go above him to his boss and ask him to get some answers. …It wasn't until, I want to say, a month or two later, probably a month and a half that I finally found out that the job had been awarded to somebody else who had a higher bid than me……but now that there's no, you know, DBE requirements I don't have any other protection from the Civil Rights Office.

During a public hearing held a Caucasian subcontractor testified concerning the effects of bid shopping when a prime contractor does not adequately meet his good faith efforts requirements:

> Our experience is that we know on bid day that we have the low bid out on the street because the contractors tell you that you are low. However, maybe the low prime contractor hasn't done or has done a deficient good faith effort and suddenly they have a project in their lap and aren't able to meet the good faith effort requirements and don't have a bid from a DBE.
> And then the next five days of no call backs is them busily shopping your bid to a DBE to try to fill that requirement after the fact. That's a huge, huge loop hole problem with the program and it's more common than you think.

It is clear from personal interviews and comments in public hearings that prime contractors have been allowed to circumvent the good faith requirements under the Agencies' contracting programs to the detriment of DBEs. During personal interviews and public hearings, several business owners indicated that prime contractors solicit bids with no intention of utilizing the DBE. The owners reported that it is common for prime contractors to request bids from businesses that they know do not work in the requested area or businesses that do not have the capacity to complete the job requested.

Minority and women business owners feel that non-minority general contractors in these situations request their bid only to give the appearance of meeting the good faith requirement.

Based upon the personal interviews and testimony from public hearings, we concluded that prime contractors' prices are fixed at the time of bid submissions, whereas DBE prices are merely numbers from which to begin negotiation. In other words, a prime contractor can be the low bid and be guaranteed the project but a DBE is not guaranteed the contract even if the DBE subcontractor is the low bid at the time of bid submission.

We also concluded that the process utilized to document good faith efforts needs to be revised. Currently, the process allows prime contractors to shop a low bidder among other subcontractors to meet the goals after bids have been obtained. Further, the process creates an environment where DBEs are simply used as a tool to ensure that a prime contractor obtains a contract and not to create a sincere working relationship.

Racist and Sexist Attitudes Toward M/WBEs

Both minority and women business owners alleged that they have encountered hostility, prejudice and sexism from Agency officials and majority business owners. Often DBEs are stereotyped as incapable of providing quality goods and services. These attitudes create feelings of frustration among DBE owners and serve as barriers to DBE participation with the Agencies in contracting and purchasing. In personal interviews, several DBEs indicated they had negative experiences on job sites. As seen in the comments below, the business owners described hostile experiences that made completing a project difficult.

During personal interviews business owners were asked whether prime contractors showed favoritism to some firms on projects. As noted in the chart below, the vast majority of business owners in all categories of race, gender and ethnicity believed that prime contractors showed favoritism to some firms. While many of the firms indicated that the favoritism was based upon established working relationships, the following discussion will show examples of discriminatory treatment by prime contractors toward DBE subcontractors.

Interview Question: Do you think prime contractors show favoritism to some firms on projects?

Yes	2	4	8	1	3	5	18
No		3		1	2	5	7
No Response		1	3			2	4

DBE business owners were also asked whether their firm ever experienced discriminatory action by a participating agency. None of the DBEs interviewed felt they had experienced discriminatory action by the Municipality or the ARRC. Only five DBEs felt they had experienced discriminatory action by the AKDOT&PF.

While most business owners did not feel the Agencies had discriminated against them, the following discussion clearly shows that DBEs felt prime contractors working on contracts let by the participating Agencies had discriminated against them. Discriminatory behavior by prime contractors on Agency projects makes those Agencies a passive participant to an environment of discrimination.

The owner of a WBE supplies and commodities business discussed her experiences when she first started her business. She indicated that she had problems with contractors specifically related to her gender.

> I have to say that when I first started out in the program, as an owner of the company, there were a few contractors who made me feel inadequate because I was a woman in the area. I think they tried to push a little too much because they thought they could get away with it because I was a woman. As far as the agencies are concerned, they have been extremely supportive and I have no complaints whatsoever with the State or Municipality. But some of the contractors have been degrading and made me feel inadequate and I started to second guess things. That was more with the bidding process rather than the buying process.
> Follow up question: Did you have any problems with them using you despite that fact?
> One contractor in Juneau, I had some real major problems with. He ended up owing me a lot of money and we never gotten paid for it, which was a very good learning experience for me. I have ended up rewriting the way I bid things and putting more disclaimers.
> Follow up question: Do you think that had to do with your gender?
> He made me feel like it had to do with my gender.

During a public hearing, a WBE specialty contractor discussed the environment she felt during contract meetings.

> When you walk into a room and everyone is, you know, pretty much a male Caucasian between 30 and 60 you're always the minority there and there is a difference in the way that people communicate with each other....I always have to go into the meeting knowing every part about the contract because it'll be - - I can't get bullied in there. I can't go in there and hesitate about what I'm going to answer or about any of the project….You just have to be on top of it because people will try and boss you around. When you're younger and a woman, you know, it's a different dynamic.

Another WBE construction specialty contractor discussed the general contracting climate for women owned construction contractors. This contractor has been in business for less than 10 years and has bid several projects as a prime contractor and several projects as a subcontractor with the participating agencies during the study period.

> I heard this Saturday at a dinner party, someone saying that white males need affirmative action, we're the minority now, we can't get anything. I remember one year being at a party and there were several job foremen that were men sitting at one end of the table, and it just so happen that I was sitting across from a woman > and they started a talking about how white males needed affirmative action, they wouldn't have a woman on their job site if they could help it they would just bypass the whole thing that they needed to look out for each other. There were a lot more degrading comments made.

> This contractor than began discussing specific experiences she had on job sites.
> I remember being on a project just a couple of summers ago and everything was going fine. And actually I had a relationship with the project foreman. We'd gone to elementary and junior high and high school together and then about half way through the project, the guy who owned the company decided that he didn't need a women owned status anymore and he was going to send all of his equipment and men out then. So half way through the project he let me go and then just finished the project with his equipment and men. But we got the project due to my status, I should be here, but I just said whatever.
> When asked about other discriminatory treatment on job sites, this business owner stated:
> Just nasty things that they say. You know just unprofessional nasty things. There have been a few occasions where our company has been released. You know when things are kind of winding down. You know, you can see them kind of going through the laundry list and our company perhaps has been the last. We've never gotten a bad reputation, I've never been sued. I've never failed to perform. If anything its been the exact opposite. If they're not sure who owns the company then it isn't going to be an issue. If I already have an established relationship its not an issue but if its kind of one of those "oh it's a woman" or you know I've seen where "oh well we'll just let them go." When you can see other people who are doing the same job and maybe not doing it as efficiently or effectively or not showing up on time then its like come on.
> Follow up question: Do you think this has to do with the fact that you're a woman owned company?
> Yes
> Follow up question: Is that because you're seeing different treatment for male owned companies on jobsites?
> Definitely

An Alaska Native construction specialty contractor discussed specific experiences during a walk through on a potential job site. They indicated during a personal interview that they were targeted by the project manager because they were minority owned. The other non-minority owned specialty contractors were not treated in the same fashion during the walk through.

> We had a contract with (prime contractor). They are very schooled and they would call us to the office that was in Wasilla. That's like a 45 minute drive up there one way. And we would go to see what he wanted and he was very rude. The first thing he would say, "Now the reason you're here is because you are a minority." And he > would say that every time we showed up. He would pick us out for some reason and it just bugged him something terrible. And we were always real nice. I only got mad at him once because he kept saying you minority people are not qualified. Well we are qualified, we happened to be in business a long time. I told him he needed to go to groom school. And then he did get really mad, got up across the table pointing his finger at me.

> The whole crew is that way. All their lead people are that way. (Prime contractor) is more or less a worldwide contractor. And they say do what you want, we got a bus full of lawyers.

This contractor also addressed specific instances of discriminatory behavior while on the job site. The contractor indicated that they were treated unfairly because of their race and that the discriminatory treatment caused delays on the contract and caused them significant expense.

> When we would park our equipment on the job site, somebody in their employment would show up and turn on all the headlights on our equipment. And we would show up the next morning, all the batteries are dead on everything. We would have to send a mechanic to the job to start everything, wasting half a day and that was like every morning. And the project was on that [name deleted] where the weather is just brutal. And one time they actually took one of our semi trailers, pushed it under a power line where we couldn't even get to it. And I had to beg them to go in there and move it. And they said well you didn't see us, you don't have a video tape of us, we've done nothing. Unless you have a videotape, we've done nothing.
> Follow up question: And do you think they were doing this stuff to you because you were a minority owned company?
> We were the only ones who had that problem. Just like one time I had this brand new flat bed truck and I parked underneath the power line so I would be out of their way and their excavator whacked the power line, it came down and smacked right on top of the truck, killed the battery. I actually had to have the truck towed off. They told me if you don't have a videotape of it, then we didn't do it. I said I was sitting right here, I saw what happened. They all just gang up on you and lie for each other. They were terrible to deal with.

This contractor further discussed the impact of general contractors not allowing them to perform on jobs they were previously awarded. During the personal interview, the contractor discussed the financial impact to his business from not being allowed to perform on a contract.

> If we have a certain job out there, they'll (general contractor) say "no, we'll do that." We went out and bought some equipment on this one job because we had to do certain things on the jobs. Well they took that away from us, and there we were, hanging out there with that equipment.
> Follow up question: So, you would bid the job and the contractor would be awarded the contract?

> Then there would be units taken that we were supposed to do but we didn't and we don't know if they got paid for it or not. What they do, is they would award us items and then it would show through the state with the subcontract that we were awarded these items. And then they would actually, after the contract was awarded to us, they would actually say that these items were taken away from you and they would do it themselves.
> On that one job it was really bad. They used us for a lot of stuff and took it away from us. So they were probably credited for it. One of the biggest problems we have is when we do get awarded a job, the general contractor sees to it that our money is spent. They would work day and night for us to keep up to them. They would run extra trucks, moving dirt in; they would do everything in their power to put us behind. They would force us to put in premium overtime. They would make us work weekends, Saturday and Sundays, and they would make us hire extra people just to keep up and they would just sit in a meeting and bad mouth me because I can't keep up. They would deliberately run every truck in the world, just to haul that material out to put us behind.
> Follow up question: Are they doing this to all the subcontractors or are they just doing to..?
> I think it's just to minorities. Just to us. Sometimes it's only us on the job as a sub. It's the general and us, there are no other subs.
> Follow up question: Are these the same contractors that do this over and over again or is it across the board?
> There are only three general contractors out there and they are all the same.

An Asian owned architectural & engineering firm discussed experiences where he felt the AKDOT&PF was discriminating against him. This contractor has at least 31 years of experience in the industry and has been in business in Alaska for at least 21 years. The contractor stated:

> The DOT will not allow me to pass my work unless I redo it ten times. But they don't do that to white one.
> Follow up question: So you think they are doing that to you because of your race?
> Exactly; we did the [name deleted], they have lost three toilets there. And the toilets, we made hand sanded and everything covered all the man holes real fancy. And we didn't pass the inspection until we set it about ten times. But then you look at the other scenic sewers, the other people just put a piece of plywood and a nail on it and they passed inspection; but they wouldn't allow us to pass.

When asked his opinion regarding whether there is a difference in a participating Agency's willingness to utilize non-minority owned firms verses minority owned firms as prime contractors, he indicated

> With prime contractors you submit a bid, you're low, you meet all requirements and they give it to the second guy.
> Follow up question: What about on consulting projects?
> I don't even bother. I don't apply anymore with the DOT or the Muni or the Railroad. It's just wasting my time. You spend about a whole week to prepare the proposal and they haven't read anything but about three or four pages. Another thing that ticks me off is that the guy they award the job for engineering they have five years experience compared to my forty years experience.

There is also a negative attitude regarding the DBE program and the capabilities of DBE businesses. During a public hearing, one contractor described the attitude general contractors have about the DBE program. He used the term "construction welfare". When asked to describe this phrase he stated:

> I guess it's to say that MBEs or DBEs are getting projects, are getting the opportunities for projects simply because they are MBEs or DBEs and so to some people that rolls right into the welfare syndrome.
> Follow up question: Where do you hear this term?
> Pretty much in the construction industry. I've talked to a lot of - - a lot of guys that's pretty up front, you know, they can tell you that they believe that's a form of welfare.
> Follow up question: Are these general contractors?
> Yes, some general contractors.

Another DBE specialty contractor spoke about prime contractors' perceptions of DBE firms. He commented:

> You know, people don't come up and tell you that they're discriminating against you or anything like that so, you know, you don't know, but I've heard it said, you know, many times over the years by other firms that, you know, they're a DBE, they're really not qualified.
> They don't have a good firm and the only reason they're in business is because they are a DBE because the agencies are committed to giving them a certain amount of work otherwise they wouldn't stay afloat.

On the basis of the interviews and hearing testimony of the DBEs, it is the perception that sexist and racist attitudes still persist in the contracting environment within the Agencies. These attitudes carry with them negative presumptions about the capabilities of minorities and women. More importantly, such presumptions have a negative impact on the contracting opportunities for minorities and women. Therefore, as a result of the personal interviews and testimony at the public hearings, we concluded that the hostile contracting environment perpetuates racial and gender stereotypes and ultimately discourages and limits DBE bidding.

Barriers Faced by M/WBEs

Bonding and Financing

It is often difficult for small, minority and women owned business to obtain financing and secure bonding. During the personal interviews, the business owners were asked to identify the greatest barrier to contracting with the participating Agencies. The following chart shows the firms' responses based upon race/ethnicity or gender. As shown, one hundred percent of the African American firms, fifty percent of the ANCs, forty-five percent of the Native American /Alaska Native firms and fifty percent of the Asian firms indicated that bonding was the greatest barrier to contracting with the Agencies. By contrast, none of the Hispanic and only twenty-five percent of the WBE and thirteen percent of the Caucasian male owned business felt bonding was the greatest barrier. The information in the chart as well as the comments below show that the inability to obtain sufficient bonding has a disparate impact on minority owned businesses as compared to Caucasian male and female owned businesses.

Interview Question: Firms who indicated bonding was the greatest contracting barrier.
Race/Ethnicity or Gender Category of Business Owner
African American	ANC	Native American/ Alaska Native	Asian	Hispanic	Caucasian Women	Caucasian Men

An Alaska Native business owner who provides general services discussed the impact bonding has on her capacity to contract. She discussed how her lack of bonding capacity has prevented her from growing her business.

> Bonding is our main issue. We do 4 million dollars worth of business and we will see a twenty-thirty percent profit of what we do. Our overhead is around one million dollars per year. While doing the math, at about four million dollars, we are paying for our overhead but we can't grow any further than that with the way bonding is since 9/11. It has tightened up so hard that they want to see very healthy money in > the bank, liquid financial assets. It is very difficult to get those assets in the bank and locked up when all your profit is going back in the company to keep the doors open. This is where we have been for the past three years.

> With a small disadvantaged business, our bonding capacity is one and a half - two million dollars. We have a million dollar job that was awarded to us two years ago and we are just now starting it and that means that one half of our bonding has been tied up for two years. Without any other kind of bonding programs, we can't do anything. We have good [general] contractors who sometimes give us work and don't make us bond back. A lot of the primes, they have to bond a job and they make the subcontractor bond back to the prime. We have a couple of prime contractors who don't require us to bond back. They help us out because they know our reputation and they have worked with us over the last eight years.

An ANC construction company representative discussed the impact bonding has on his company's ability to serve as a general contractor on construction projects. He indicated that he is unable to bid as a prime contractor because of the bonding requirements in construction contracting. Conversely, because the federal government does not require bonding on service contracts, his company is able to serve as a prime contractor on service projects. He stated:

> The bonding requirements is the key for most all of us out here; it is for us. It keeps us out from being a prime [contractor]. We can do much larger jobs as a prime, when we're doing service contracts with the federal government, because there's no bond limit with service contracts. We're doing a million dollar contract and it's a service contract. But, getting the business to renovate something or constructing something for the state, we can't do it and we can't touch it.

An owner of an Asian owned business that provides general services discussed problems he was having attempting to obtain bonding when he first started his business. He stated:

> The one consistent barrier I see for small enterprises it is the bonding requirements, which is often so high that you can't do it. When we started here in town, there was a bond of $150,000 for the City contract. We spent months trying to find someone to bond. We couldn't get anybody to bond us and we had to eventually pull out the cash just to get the contract. It seems as if there should be some process for which small enterprises should be able to access some bonding resources. If you go off into the private sector, the big companies already have their finances in place and it's not a big deal for them. But for small companies, it doesn't give them the chance.

The owner of an Alaska Native construction company discussed the specific problems companies have bonding in the state of Alaska. She stated:

> Bonding in the state of Alaska is always tough. We generally have one or two companies that will bond in Alaska total. And they have way more opportunity than they have capacity. You earn bonding, its not like buying insurance. Either they qualify and charge you a fortune or they decide they are not interested in you.

An ANC construction company discussed the problems 8(a) companies have obtaining bonding. He indicated that his company had to joint venture with another company to obtain the bonding capacity needed for the project. He states:

> Getting bonding is really hard after 9/11. You will find that a lot of companies say bonding is a tough one, especially, for an 8(a) corporation.
> Follow up question: And the reason that it is especially difficult for an 8(a) Corporation?
> I don't know. We do the things that we need to do, but it's just a matter of that we are too young in this thing. But we will get it eventually and just get our foot in the door with the bond. Our project that we are working, building the three building sets, we teamed up with another company, made a joint venture, because they could get the bond and we can't.

Clearly, bonding and financing issues present obstacles for DBE businesses in contracting with the Agencies. This ultimately prevents the financial growth of DBEs and excludes these businesses from larger contracting opportunities. Therefore, the Agencies should take such factors into consideration when setting bonding requirements.

Good Old Boy Network

Another contracting barrier indicated by DBE business owners is the existence of an informal network, commonly referred to as a "good old boy network" that gives advantages to firms selected for contracts by the Agencies. In interviews, many DBE business owners indicated that the existence of this good old boy network operated to exclude their businesses and that their inability to be a part of this network had a disparate impact on their ability to obtain business. The chart below summarizes the responses of business owners to the question whether they were aware of informal networking that gives advantages to firms selected for contracts let by the Agencies. Of the DBEs interviewed, forty percent believed that a good old boy network exists that gives advantages to firms selected for Agencies' contracts, whereas only thirteen percent of the Caucasian male owned firms believed that such a network exists.

Interview Question: Is your firm aware of informal networking that gives advantages to firms selected for Agencies' contracts?

The following discussion expresses the comments of some of the DBE firms regarding the existence and impact of a good old boy network on their business operations.

An Alaska Native owned construction company owner discussed how the good old boy network operates within the Municipality of Anchorage. She indicated that the relationship the Municipality has with one of its contractors unfairly precludes competitive bidding within the Municipality. Regarding this relationships she states:

> Yes, one in particular is relating to the Municipality of Anchorage. I think that it is unfair and potentially illegal, the relationship the Municipality of Anchorage has with (company name) and the relationship I think it is with an architectural or design firm. There are numerous projects let by Municipality of Anchorage that are never put out for competitive bid that you read about these developments and activities in the business section of the paper, the money section of the paper. And then you wonder when was this opportunity ever open to anybody. I think a current example is the downtown convention center, all of the different recent developments of the fire station, fire department, some of the schools and again the relationship just looks far too comfortable to me between the Municipality of Anchorage and a single sole general contractor and a single sole design and engineering firm.
> Follow up question: Is it your opinion that the relationship operates to the exclusion of DBE firms being able to participate in the market place?
> Yes, certainly it seems the appearances that these relationships are already established projects, already designed and determined and it's only until it reaches the newspaper that you even know that these activities are taking place. So certainly to the exclusion of DBE, MBE and woman owned businesses.

A WBE professional services firm owner described the impact the good old boy network has on her business. She indicated that to circumvent the network, she sometimes has to have her husband serve as the point of contact even though he has no direct ties to her business. When asked about contracting barriers, she stated:

> I think not being able to tie in with the big boys. It just kind of feels that the people that get on those projects are already tied into the primes and everybody skates in as a unit. So they go with the people they worked with before. The barriers to entry are just, well it's kind of their network.
> Follow up question: How is that a barrier in subcontracting?
> Well, you know if they're in need, if all of the other male companies are being put to work, then I'll get the call. But if there's opportunity for them to use all of their equipment, then they'll do it and it's kind of a pecking order. And honestly to kind of go around some of that, I've used my husband as a point of contact. He's retired and doesn't have anything to do with the company but sometimes I'm just like "make the call." And that seems to be helpful.

An Asian owned architectural & engineering firm owner discussed how the good old boy network operates in the selection process for AKDOT&PF contracts. He stated:

> The good old boy network is based on the lower level of the DOT selection committee. They know the other engineers and architects, they worked for them before. I even went to a meeting and they wink at each other. I went to a meeting one time for an interview and the other firm brought pizza. It's not bribery but it's still brought to the interview to eat.

During a public hearing, a DBE architectural services business owner expressed similar frustrations with the Agencies and his company's inability to obtain contracts because of the perceived relationship between a select few contractors and the agencies:

> We do several million dollars a year in the consulting fee business and over 14 years the total amount of monies that we received that could be attributed to being a DBE is about $60,000, which is nothing…. I think the Municipality of Anchorage is a very difficult one to break with. D.O.T. is - - we have never gotten a job from the D.O.T. in fourteen years of our firm. We have gone - - we don't go after projects if we're not qualified so it's not a question of us trying to reach beyond our capabilities to win a project with them……I can tell you that with - - between the D.O.T., the Municipality of Anchorage and the Alaska Railroad you can list in our area of business half a dozen firms in Anchorage that probably get ninety percent of the work and this has occurred year after year after year…..incidentally, we compete against these firms very well in other sectors otherwise we wouldn't be in business.
> For example, the Municipality of Anchorage they say their criteria might include, you know, what is your past record working with the Municipality of Anchorage. Well, right off the bat you're losing points 'cause you haven't worked with them."

This business owner also discussed some of the issues he has with the debriefing sessions where Agency officials will review the company's proposal:

> Now you know, we've gone to debriefings, for example, with the D.O.T. I have found that, you know, the debriefings on our proposals, why we were not selected and all

> I've found it's more defensive. And what I'm told is you should get - - you should subcontract to one of these other firms that are winning the projects, be a subcontractor, that's the way to break in. I say, why should I have to subcontract, I can do that job just as well without subcontracting.
> The other thing is, why do they believe that these firms want to hire me as a subcontractor and just give me an opportunity to break in and become a competitor with them. I mean, they've got it good now, you know, why rock the boat.

An Alaska Native owned general services business owner discussed the relationships with the AKDOT&PF and certain firms. She stated:

> There are a lot of back doors that go on. The DOT, whether they acknowledge it or not, does do business with certain people and not with others, certain primes.
> Follow up question: Is there a reason?
> I think that they form a relationship with someone and just maintain that relationship. They are comfortable just going to one place. They will deny that in public, but that is just the way it is. I don't care what anyone says; I know what's going on here.

An Alaska Native owned construction specialty contractor expressed frustration regarding the loss of business due to the general contractor's decision to do business with a friend. The contractor stated:

> I'm sure I've lost a general contractor because they got involved with another company, they partnered up with this other company. And that other company they partnered with is really good friends with a certain general, so because those two are drinking buddies, that company gets all the work. They don't have to bid work, they don't have to do nothing; they get it handed to them.

This business owner also discussed how the network operates within the ARRC. She stated:

> It is really hard to get business because they are the good old boys network there. The type of work we do, we bid as a sub. They are pretty shifty over there at the ARRC. It is very hard to do business with them because they play by their own rules. They got a whole different set of rules, rules on paper. They make no representatives available. They give you a lot of lip service but don't really follow through with much.
> It is very hard to get a foot in the door with these guys. But their ploy to keep from having to do anything is that they attend these 8(a) functions and they talk with forked tongue. They come and they go, "we're here, we're spending all this time with you, poor disadvantaged companies, we want to help you…" They can say as an agency, "we have gone to all of these functions and we really tried to include these people into our operations." The problem is that is all they have done, give them lip service unless you are buddy-buddy with someone in the agency. At one point in time, we were the buddy-buddy, not at [company name deleted], but when we worked for another 8(a) company. We got invited to a lot of stuff. Now we are not in that position and that is just the way it is. We don't run around crying about it, we just look elsewhere for opportunity.

Removal of DBE Goals

Concern has been expressed regarding the impact that discontinuation of the DBE contracting program has had on minority and women owned businesses contracting with the Agencies. Several DBE business owners stated that discontinuation of the DBE program would result in greater underutilization of minority and women owned businesses. The belief is that without programs requiring utilization of minority and women owned businesses, the contracting environment in Alaska is such that minority and women owned businesses would have even fewer contracting opportunities than they presently have. DBE business owners cite a reduction in subcontracting activity since the suspension of the DBE goals as evidence of how DBEs are treated when no goals are required.

The charts below summarize responses to questions asked of DBEs regarding utilization of their companies by prime contractors when there are no contracting goals. The DBEs were asked whether, if there were no goals, they thought prime contractors would utilize minority firms and whether they are used by prime contractors on projects where there are no goals. While many of the DBEs interviewed indicated that they are still used by prime contractors on projects where there are no goals, the examples provided by DBEs who are no longer used since the suspension of the goals are so drastic that they need mentioning.

During the personal interview of an ANC that provides professional services, the owner discussed the impact the removal of the goals has had on the percentage of bids his company receives. He indicated that the percentage of bids received by his company dropped by over half since 2005 when the goals were suspended. He expressed concerned that without the goals his company may not succeed. He stated:

> When there were DBE goals, we were far more successful in the number of bids won. Our bidding percentages have dropped by over half since the goals were dropped to zero. I'm referring to bidding percentages as in the number of bids won vs. the number of bids submitted.
> Follow up question: Do you think that is directly related to the removal of goals.
> Yes, I do.
> Follow up question: Why do you think that has happened to you?
> I think part of it is that if they're not required to use DBE's or small businesses, they would prefer not. I'm sure it's a lot of headache and paperwork for them. I would hope that one day we would be big enough to compete on a level playing field.
> Without DBE goals, at least for the median term, I am very concerned about the viability of [company name]. As we stand today, I don't know that we are ready to compete in a zero goal DBE environment effectively.

An Alaska Native owned construction company discussed the impact the removal of the goals has had on contracting opportunities for her business. When asked if she has ever been the low bidder and not received the contract, she responded as follows:

> We wouldn't know because they [prime contractors] wouldn't tell us any different. Nobody is watching over them, their bids, and they keep it confidential. They don't publicize their bids.
> Follow up question: Have you seen a decline in the number of opportunities you have encountered?
> Without the percentage, yes definitely.

Another Alaska Native owned construction company expressed the same sentiment. He stated:

> When there were goals that needed to be met, that gave us an advantage. They [prime contractors] would then look at us where otherwise they probably wouldn't have. They solicited bids to us.
> Follow up question: Have you noticed a change since the program goals have been suspended?
> Yes, totally decreased and dropped off the board.

During a public hearing, in response to an inquiry about the effect of the goals suspension, a DBE specialty construction company indicated:

> There has been a significant decline.
> Follow up question: A decline in the number of bids you've put out or a decline in the number of bids you've received?
> The number of bids I've been awarded.

A woman-owned DBE firm commented upon the change in her business since the goals suspension:

> In the summer of 2006, my phone stopped ringing. Actually, in the spring, which is a time when, for my kind of business, you know, that's a time when we all get geared up and really ready for the season in Alaska. And it was quite noticeable. None of the firms that I had been working with for, you know, 15 years at that point were calling.
> So in the fall of 2006…I ran into the principal for one of the engineering firms that I had been - - had a very active - - I mean, they had probably - - there had been years when their firm accounted for 60, 70 percent of my income on a number of different projects……He said because we no longer are required by the Department of Transportation to provide a percent - - or I think what he said was that the scoring on the proposals no longer has a certain percentage that they give you if you have DBE participation at a certain level, he said that, "our [company name] office…has decided that we - - make much better overhead on our own employees doing the kind of work that you provided us previously. And so we're doing that in-house."
> A second specific occurrence…the business development manager for that engineering firm said, "I've really missed working with you, I want to you know it's nothing personal, but we no longer have DBE - - get DBE percentage points, and so we're doing all of that work in-house."
> Follow-up question: About how many engineering firms do you normally do sub-consulting work with in the area?

Six engineering firms, one landscape architecture firm.

Follow-up question: And during that same period of time, the spring of 2006, did you notice a drop in opportunities with all of those firms?

Yes. Well, except for the landscape architecture firm, and - - those are not DOT projects.

Follow-up question: And have you seen any change, any positive change in their ability or willingness to use your company since you've had that conversation? Or is it still a situation where they are doing work in-house?

It's a still a situation where they are doing the work in-house.

Follow-up question: Your ability to obtain that business was directly the result of the DBE goals?

Now I realize that.

Follow-up question: At the time you didn't know?

You know, I really didn't. …I just assumed that as time went on that it didn't have to do with my gender, that it had to do with, you know, my ability - - my having proven myself in my area of expertise.

Follow-up question: Since that time period (spring of 2006), have you submitted any bids or any RFPs to the DOT as a prime or sub?

No. There have been no opportunities for me to submit as a prime. And so I would need to be invited, or solicit an invitation to be a part of a larger firm.

Follow-up question: Like the ones you've had the relationship with in the past?

Yeah. Exactly.

During a personal interview, an ANC construction company discussed the immediate impact the removal of the DBE goals had on subcontracting opportunities. This business owner had bids pending with prime contractors when the goals were suspended. He stated that beginning the day the goals were suspended he was no longer considered by the prime contractor on the pending projects. He was eventually advised by the prime contractor that they found a "better way to complete the project". In response to the question "are you used by prime contractors when there are no DBE goals," the ANC business owner stated:

They either do all the work themselves or go back to the company they have a long term relationship with. I have been contacted about 6 times over the past 10 years > for projects that don't have DBE goals. When there were goals, I was contacted on every project.

> You could tell it happened the day it happened, you could tell it went away. We had 3 or 4 bids out there that all of the sudden had no more consideration and [prime contractors] just stopped talking us.
> Follow up question: When the program went away, what projects were you bidding on that died?
> We were bidding on [project name], [project name], [project name] and one up North, [project name] and [project name].
> Follow up question: So these were all projects that you were in the process of bidding on when the program went away?
> We had actually turned in these bids and were being evaluated and all of the sudden the program was cut out in one day.
> Follow up question: So you never heard back from the prime contractors?
> We kept calling them and they said they would find a better way to do it. They were pretty nice about it.

This business owner also indicated that because the goals no longer exist, the DBE subcontractors cannot benefit from utilizing the general contractor's bond. Rather, DBE contractors are now required to maintain their own bond to perform as a subcontractor on AKDOT&PF contracts.

> Under the program [DBE goals program], the generals do not require the little guys, like us, the DBE's to have bonding, which most of us or none of us can get. Under this program, there is no requirement which most state contracts or federal contracts have wrote up clauses that require the bonding to go all the way through the subcontractors.
> The DBE programs don't require subcontractors that are DBE to carry the bond. That opens up the world to allow us to work properly. This maybe a new onset that is lost in the whole shuffle of a program, but it is a huge door opener to allow us to go to work and why do we need subcontractors as opposed to general contractors as a prime? Most of all of us little guys don't have options and we can't be the prime so we rush to be the subcontracts. So when that went away, all the opportunities for sub-work went away.

This contractor also discussed the shift in his gross revenues from being derived primarily from the public sector prior to 2005 to the private sector in 2005. He indicted that the shift occurred because contracting opportunities in the public sector dried up once the goals were suspended.

When asked about the shift in percentages of his gross revenues from primarily public to primarily private sector work, he states:

> Follow up question: Regarding the public and private sector percentages, 2005 was mostly private. Was that switch because of the DBE program going away?
> We didn't really compete in the DBE anymore, we started to and got one job in the DBE and got four more bids around Alaska and they all just went away because it happened right in the middle of everything. We got one of them just before the DBE went away. All of the rest of the jobs went away immediately.

This contractor also discussed a meeting that was held for DBEs and prime contractors following the directive to suspend the goals. According to the DBE business owner, the prime contractors at the meeting made it clear that they were no longer going to use DBE subcontractors.

> As soon as that program went away, they [Agency officials] called us all to a meeting at the Railroad, everybody was like, "Now what are we going to do now because there's a lot of DBEs up here." Some of the big primes were there and apparently they weren't going to use us anymore, as far as they were concerned, it was a big hassle to send out letters to all the DBEs and go through the procurement process. But the Railroad in particular encouraged us to keep bidding them and they said they would encourage the primes to keep using us. It was obvious right off the bat that the primes weren't going to.

During a personal interview, an Alaska native owned construction company indicated that because of the loss of business opportunities following the suspension of the DBE goals, his company was forced to sell some of their equipment that was not being used. He states:

> As soon as the DBE status was taken away a couple of years ago, we sold forty-nine pieces of equipment because [it was] sitting around doing nothing. Back hoes, loaders, trucks. We get geared up for the work and it gets taken away and it doesn't do any good for the business.

An ANC professional services contractor also discussed sentiments of the DBE and prime contractors during the meeting held following the suspension of the goals:

> My concern I've had when I attended a meeting back when it was announced about the studies and that the goals were going to zero, it really raised a lot of questions especially from the smaller organizations about how if there were no goals then how were the prime contractors going to be held accountable for giving, maybe accountable is the wrong word, but how is it going to be fair in the future for smaller companies to be able to do work for the larger primes because I think it was really made clear at that meeting because a lot of the primes stood up and said well, maybe not a lot, but a few stood up in the meeting and said well if there aren't any goals then why do I need to do contract work for smaller companies if I can do the work myself why would I do that.

> So there's a lot of concern that was raised, even some of the smaller companies even stood up. I mean I kind of hear them saying "hey this going to become very unfair to us" and in some cases there were some who said "you know what, this going to just put me out of business."

Based on the above findings, absent a DBE participation program, the level of DBE participation in Agency purchasing and contracting activity will decline.

Reverse Discrimination

Several non-DBE contractors interviewed indicated that they experienced reverse discrimination. The majority of the complaints regarding this issue came from small specialty contractors who would compete with DBE subcontractors for the subcontract items in projects owned by the Agencies. These contractors felt that the existence of the DBE goals operated to the disadvantage of the non-DBE specialty contractors in a discriminatory way.

During personal interviews, business owners of Caucasian male owned firms were asked whether they thought certified minority owned firms had a competitive advantage when bidding Agency projects and whether they had encountered reverse discrimination. The results are charted below. The vast majority of business owners who responded to the question regarding whether minority owned firms had a competitive advantage when bidding Agency projects indicated that the minority business owners had a competitive advantage. Thirty-one percent of the business owners asked responded that they felt they had experienced reverse discrimination. Many of the business owners who felt they had not experienced reverse discrimination were large prime contracting companies.

During a personal interview a Caucasian owned specialty contracting company that serves as both a prime contractor and a subcontractor discussed how from either contracting perspective the DBE goals served to discriminate against non-DBE firms. This contractor first discussed the problems with the DBE goals from the perspective of a prime contractor. He stated:

> As long as there's a DBE it's unfair. We have bid general airport jobs, and we've had lower bids but in order to meet the goal we have to hire somebody and pay them more money. And if you go through all the crap you got to do to get that covered, what happens is, they have a book that says these guys do [contracting area]. You got to send out faxed information about the job and ask them for a bid. Then they have to fax that back saying yes or no. There might be a guy in Nome that will say I'm going to bid that job. The job is damn near up by Seattle in the southeast. There's no way in God's green earth that he can compete. But being he's a DBE, you have to take his bid. Or he won't fax you that thing back until the last day, because they know the game to play. Which is they want you to use a DBE no matter where you're at. So they are holding that fax until you can't get it back. It's a nightmare to go through that. And we've had to do it more than once.

This contractor now discusses this issue from the perspective of a non-DBE subcontractor. He stated:

> From the point of a subcontractor, subbing to generals, we feel that the process is not fair either because they'll automatically take a DBE so the taxpayers are paying > more because the general has to meet the quota. So they will take a specialty subcontractor as a DBE because the DBE knows that they can be ten to fifteen percent higher on their bid. It's a system that's from years ago and it should be given up. 8(a) is the same thing. But 8(a) has a ceiling cap. Whereas, if you are a DBE you never graduate. There's never a ceiling rate. And I think if they're going to have a DBE program, it's a bonafide program that should be structured like 8(a).

> To compete against a DBE, even with a general contractor, as a specialty contractor it makes it more difficult and it doesn't save the taxpayer any money. We've lost nice work that we were low bid on but because we weren't a DBE. The general contractor had to give it to the minority business, it was a woman owned. She's the biggest [contracting area] company in Alaska.
> What gets me is that I don't have a leg to stand on to sue if they don't use my low number, but the person that's a DBE has a leg a stand on to sue because they didn't use a DBE. It's almost reverse discrimination. There is no recourse. It takes out the competitive component of competitive bidding. It's no longer competitive when there's favoring.

When asked what the agencies can to do improve this problem the contractor stated:

> Get rid of the DBE completely. Make it a fair playing field. Go with the best value. Or if they have to absolutely have to keep DBE, put a cap on it where they can reapply for only a set time.

During a public hearing, a Caucasian specialty contractor testified that he has experienced reverse discrimination because of the DBE program. When asked: Have you been advised by general contractors that but for the DBE program that you would be receiving certain contracts, that if they did not have to give the contract to a DBE that you would get the contract? He replied:

> Yep. They call us say you were low, but we have to meet our goal with the D.O.T. and we have to give it to the DBE 'cause we're one of the - - our business is one of the things that are in the DBE program…

Another Caucasian male owned specialty contractor discussed his frustration regarding the preference given to women owned businesses that are not given to his veteran owned business. He stated:

> There are very few contractors in town and one of them is women owned and they got quite a little advantage over us.
> What bugs me is my partner is a disabled veteran, and I see the women owned operations get the bigger percentage of the work and the woman owned has the higher rating than a disabled vet even on military work. It bugs me. My partner is a retired disabled officer in the army and he spent twenty years in the military. He got > shot up and everything else in a couple of different conflicts and the woman owned gets higher priority than he does even on military work. That doesn't set very good.

Problems With ANCs

Several business owners expressed frustration with the DBE preferences that are given to large multi-million dollar ANCs. Under the current program, ANCs are given DBE status and are exempt from the personal net worth cap mandated for all other DBEs. Therefore, ANCs with gross revenues and capacities similar to the large Caucasian owned prime contractors are able to receive preference under the DBE goals program for work they perform as a subcontractor. As previously noted, the ANCs have demographics similar to the Caucasian owned businesses and often times do not experience the same barriers as many of the small DBE businesses. The owner of a small ANC professional services company expressed these sentiments during a personal interview. He discussed the concerns he had that his company would be included in the statistics of the large fortune 1,000 ANCs. He expressed concern that the purpose of the DBE goals program, i.e., to assist in growing small minority and women owned businesses, was being lost. He stated:

> I'm very interested in the results of the disparity study because one thing that I have felt has been unfair is that in the DBE arena, everyone is just lumped together. The danger that I see with Alaska Native Corporations and Alaska Native businesses in particular is that our own company is an ANC just the same as the regional corporations, some of which are fortune 1,000 companies, but we are still minority owned. Even within an ethnic group, if we get lumped together, there is tremendous potential there to do great harm to the merging native small business.
> The second concern is that the disparity study categories are so broad that specifically our ethnic group, Alaska Native, the true small Alaska Native DBE gets lumped in with a division of a big regional corporation that just happens to have a sub that's a DBE or an 8(a). I think that's kind of the unique situation to Alaska, and to Alaska Native companies. We have to compete against the division of Artic Slope or one of the fortune 1,000 companies; I don't think that's fair either. Our goal within the company is in the next five – seven years, to be able to compete without the need for a DBE certification. That's the type of system, maybe something that the State needs to look at within the whole DBE context. This shouldn't be a permanent make work kind of thing, they should be able to assist small businesses grow to the point that they no longer need it, like the 8(a). That's our goal and hopefully every other business is working in that direction.

Results of the Telephone Survey

The telephone survey conducted in connection with this study provides additional useful evidence that supports the anecdotal evidence obtained during the personal interviews and public hearings. As the survey lasted an average of 11 minutes and 45 seconds and was conducted via telephone, interviewers were able to survey hundreds of business owners. Including the data obtained from the telephone survey as one of the methods for supporting anecdotal evidence allows the Wilson Group to compare the general information provided by hundreds of business owners with the detailed information provided by the firms that conducted hour long personal interviews.

The questions asked during the telephone survey were divided into three categories. First, general demographic questions were asked. Similar to the personal interviews, asking demographic questions provides a business profile for the businesses interviewed.

The next questions address possible barriers that business owners may have encountered attempting to do business with the participating agencies. The business owners were provided a list of possible barriers and were asked if they had experienced any of the barriers when attempting to do business with the Department of Transportation. The results show that many of the barriers identified were the same as those discussed in depth by business owners interviewed in during the personal interviews and testified to during the public hearings.

The next questions addressed possible discriminatory practices of prime contractors. The businesses surveyed were asked whether they experienced certain business practices with prime contractors. There were also a series of questions regarding whether business owners felt they had experienced discrimination and whether a good old boy network exists. The results of these questions were consistent with the anecdotal information obtained during personal interviews and public hearings.

Business Characteristics

Similar to the personal interview section of the report, the following charts summarize the questions designed to establish a business profile for the businesses surveyed. The business profile questions asked concern the following areas: person responsible for daily operations of the firm; primary line of business, number of years in business, organizational structure, race /ethnicity of controlling partner or owner, gender of controlling partner or owner; years of experience of owner, highest level of education completed by owner, total number of employees and gross receipts.

There were a few of the demographic questions that showed significant results when the responses were evaluated by race, ethnicity and gender. For those questions, the demographic information was charted by race.

Only about ten percent of firms surveyed have been have been in business for more than forty years, of which the majority are Caucasian male owned firms. The largest category was between zero and ten years of existence. It is significant to note that of the African American and Native Hawaiian owned businesses interviewed, only 26 percent and 20 percent respectively, had been in business more than 20 years. Whereas, 51.3 percent and of the Caucasian males, 50.8 percent of the WBEs and 63.6 percent of the Asian owned businesses had been in business more that 20 years.

On the other end of the spectrum only twenty-five of the firms surveyed had 101 or more employees, the majority of which were Caucasian male owned and ANCs. This information is consistent with that found with the demographics of the firms who participated in the personal interviews.

The largest percentage of Caucasian male owned firms who answered the question indicated that the firm had gross revenues in excess of $10,000,000 (18.3 percent). The largest percentage of ANCs responding had gross revenues in excess of $10,000,000 (30.3 percent).

Conversely, of the African American owned firms interviewed the largest percentage of responding businesses had gross revenues of less than $50,000.00 (20 percent). The largest percentage of Caucasian female owned firms responding had gross revenues between $1,000,000-$3,000,000. The majority of the Asian males owned firms that responded had gross revenues $1,000,000-$3,000,000 (45.5 percent). The majority of the Native Hawaiian owned firms had gross revenues of $100,000-$300,000 (60 percent).

Similar to the information obtained during the personal interviews, while the majority of the firms interviewed had fewer than 10 employees regardless of race/ethnicity, the firms with higher gross revenues were Caucasian owned and the ANCs. The remaining DBEs had gross revenues significantly lower.

Percentage of gross receipts from Private Sector verses the Public Sector

The following two charts show the percentage of gross receipts for the firms surveyed which come from the private sector verses the public sector.

Nearly forty percent of the total surveyed did less than ten percent of their business with private sector companies.

Only about twenty percent of respondents did more than eighty percent of their business with the private sector.

Once again the amount of work done in the public sector was pretty evenly distributed with a slight skew toward zero to ten percent with 180 of the 500 or 36.1 percent of respondents. It is interesting to note that a very small percentage of firms worked principally for the public sector. Less than three percent of the responding firms conduct more than eighty percent of their business with the public sector.

Barriers to Contracting with the Department of Transportation

The next several charts summarize business owners' responses to questions regarding whether firms experienced certain barriers to bidding or obtaining work on Alaska Department of Transportation projects. The information in this section is categorized by race, ethnicity and gender. In many cases the results show varied results for DBE businesses verses non-DBE businesses.

However, of the African American owned firms interviewed 55 percent of them felt limited information regarding available opportunities was a problem. More than 20 percent of the remaining DBEs in each ethnic category except Asians indicated that limited information regarding available opportunities was a barrier to contracting with the Department of Transportation.

Twenty percent of the participating firms believed the design format was too difficult for their company. Of note, 33.4 percent of business owners did not provide a response to this question.

Problems Associated with Discriminatory Practices

The next several questions address actions business owners perceived to be discriminatory. Business owners were asked if an informal network exists to the exclusion of their firm.

The existence of an informal network of prime and subcontractors that operates to the exclusion of certain firms was divided among racial lines. Twenty-seven (27.3) percent of Asian and 30 percent of African American owned firms strongly agreed with the belief that such a network exists. Conversely, 68.5 percent of the Caucasian male owned firms either disagreed or strongly disagreed with the belief.

Business owners were asked if they felt that qualifications and performance double standards make it difficult for minority/woman-owned firms to win projects. Over twenty percent of firms felt that there were double standards set for minority versus non-minority vendors. 27.3 percent of Asian and 35 percent of African American firms strongly agreed with this statement. While, 62 percent of Caucasian male owned firms either disagreed or strongly disagreed with the existence of a double standard.

Business owners were asked if they felt that had experienced discrimination within the last five years due to the owner of the firm: On the whole, there have been very few cases of perceived discrimination over the last five years. However, 36.4 percent of Asian business owners and 15 percent of African American business owners felt they had experienced discrimination based upon their ethnicity/race.

The next chart addressed when the discriminatory act occurred. Business owners who felt they had experienced discrimination were asked if the act occurred before or after the contract was awarded. The chart below reflects business owners' responses. When discrimination was perceived, the most common perception was that it occurred before the award was presented.

CHAPTER 9.0 – FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

CHAPTER 9.0 – FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The findings and recommendations included in this chapter are based on the analyses of the data represented in Chapters 2.0 through 8.0. The findings and recommendations address procurement practices for AKDOT&PF, ARRC and the Municipality. Each agency's subsection will include recommendations regarding the need for both race specific and race neutral goals. Where appropriate, the subsections will provide specific recommendations for procurement of construction services, professional services, commodities and general services.

This chapter will conclude with recommendations that are applicable to all three agencies.

9.1 Alaska Department of Transportation & Public Facilities – Goal Setting

The United States Department of Transportation requires that each recipient of federal dollars establish a Federal DBE Program with an annual "overall" goal. The DBE Program should first seek to achieve its overall goal through race-neutral methods, if possible. The disparity study analyzed the availability and utilization of DBEs for AKDOT&PF construction and professional services. Based on the data analyzed for the study period, the Wilson Group recommends a conservative overall DBE goal of 13 percent; 5.1 percent race-neutral; and, 7.9 percent race-conscious. The goal is less than the estimated availability. However, the goal is significantly higher than previously applied by the AKDOT&PF. Providing a lower DBE goal than firms available will allow the contracting community time to adjust their business practices to increase business opportunities with DBEs without an immediate burden on their businesses. Based on the analysis conducted, The Wilson Group also recommends goals for construction, and professional services contracts.

9.1.1 Construction Contracts

Finding: The study found a statistically significant disparity in utilization of DBEs in construction contracts for African American-owned companies, Alaska Native Corporations, American Indian/Alaska Native-owned companies, Asian Indian/Pacific Islanders-owned companies and Hispanic American-owned companies. Eleven (11) percent of the construction contractors are ready willing and able DBEs, but only 5.7 percent of the construction dollars were awarded to such DBEs.

Recommendation: AKDOT&PF should set a construction DBE goal of 10.0 percent for the DBE contractors, 5.1 percent of which can be met through race neutral means and 4.9 percent of which should be race specific project goals. Only firms that are significantly underutilized should participate in the race-specific goals established.

9.1.2 Professional Services Contracts

Finding: The AKDOT&PF has underestimated the availability of DBE professional services firms including architectural and engineering firms. The study found a statistically significant disparity in the utilization of DBEs in architectural and engineering contracts for all DBE classifications, except Alaska Tribal Corporations which has zero availability. Twenty-two (22) percent of the professional services firms are ready, willing and able DBEs, but only 1.4 percent of the professional services contracts were awarded to such DBEs.

Recommendation: AKDOT&PF should set a DBE goal for professional services contracts of 13 percent of which 0.4 percent can be met by race neutral goals and 12.6 percent by race specific goals. The Office of Procurement should work with the Civil Rights Office and develop a goals program that is similar to the construction contract DBE program. The goals should be set based on the scope of work known at the time of the solicitation in the same manner as DBE goals are set on construction projects.

Additional analyses were performed for the Federal Highway Administration (FHWA) and Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) funded contracts to determine appropriate goals for each modal, and they are as follows:

- FAA : 4.3 percent race-neutral; and, 8.7 percent race-conscious;
- FHWA: 5.7 percent race-neutral; and, 7.3 percent race-conscious.

There was one Federal Transit Administration (FTA) contract issued during the study. Therefore, the Wilson Group is precluded from recommending a specific DBE goal for FTA. As such, the Wilson Group recommends that the AKDOT&PF adopt the overall goal for its FTA funded projects.

9.2 AKDOT&PF – Policies and Procedures

9.2.1 Construction

The most pervasive and widespread complaint found among DBEs of almost every ethnic/gender group was that the majority of prime contractors used unfair methods to comply with the AKDOT&PF's bidding procedures and contracting requirements. These methods create barriers for DBEs during the bidding process as well as throughout the life of the contract. Based upon review of the statistical data, anecdotal testimony, and policy and procedure review, the following are recommendations that address these barriers.

Bid Shopping

The practice of bid shopping has a disparate impact on DBE subcontractors and operates as a deterrent to DBE participation in the contracting process. Under the existing bidding procedures, prime contractors are not required to list their DBE subcontractors until after the lowest bidder has been determined. During anecdotal interviews and public hearings, DBEs state that this practice is discriminatory in that it promotes bid shopping. The statutes and regulations should be revised to assist in eliminating bid shopping.

Finding: As part of the regular design-bid-build process, the AKDOT&PF requires the submission of three forms that encourage bid shopping.

1) Subcontractors List (Form 25D-5). This form allows prime contractors five days following bid opening to identify their first tier subcontractors to be used on the project. During the five day period, DBEs complain that prime contractors bid shop to the economic detriment of smaller DBE contractors;

2) DBE Utilization Report (Form 25A-325C). This form allows prime contractors up to fifteen days following the Notice of Intent to submit a list of certified DBEs that the prime contractor will use, the type of work that the DBE will perform and the dollar amount that the DBE will be paid;

3) Prime Contractor's Written DBE Commitment form (Form 25A-326). This form allows fifteen days following the Notice of Intent for the prime contractor and DBE to formally commit to the scope of work to be performed by the DBE and the amount to be paid to the DBE.

Recommendation: The AKDOT&PF should require the submission of the Subcontractors List, DBE Utilization Report and Prime Contractor's Written DBE Commitment at bid submission. This would address the widespread complaint of DBE subcontractors that their bids are being shopped after bid opening by precluding prime contractors from negotiating DBE contracts after bid opening. This change would fix prime contractors obligation to DBEs at the time of bid opening. The more narrow the period of time between the bid closing and the execution of the contract, the less opportunity prime contractors have to bid shop. AS 36.30.115(a) should be amended to narrow the time the prime contractors have to provide their list of subcontractors.

Good Faith Efforts Submissions

The process for meeting the good faith efforts requirement for DBE goals by prime contractors is frustrated by inaccurate listing of DBEs under various subcontracting trades in the DBE directory and inaccurate contact information. During personal interviews and public hearings both non-DBE owned prime contractors and DBE subcontractors expressed frustration regarding the process used to document good faith efforts. The process used to evaluate prime contractors good faith efforts also produced concerns among both DBEs and prime contractors.

Finding: The evaluation of prime contractors' good faith efforts involves the review of documentation submitted by the prime contractor. When a prime contractor is requesting a waiver of goals, the prime contractor is required to submit the following forms: Summary of Good Faith Effort Documentation, (Form 25A-332A), DBE Form Contact Report for each DBE contacted (Form 25A-321A) and DBE Utilization Report (Form 25A-321A). The forms are forwarded to the Civil Rights Office for review. The Civil Rights Office conducts a desk audit. The desk audit is conducted by a person in the Civil Rights office who has the exclusive responsibility of determining whether the prime contractor has met the good faith efforts and therefore should be granted a waiver. This structure is perceived by DBE subcontractors and prime contractors as unfair and at times discriminatory. Some DBEs believe the good faith effort requirements are abused by the non-DBE prime contractors. Conversely, prime contractors believe the good faith efforts requirements require them to waste time contacting DBEs who do not respond to them. The evaluation of the sufficiency of prime contractors' good faith efforts are made by one person without additional input. Also, there is no mechanism in place to evaluate DBE contractors' perceived unfairness in the solicitation of quotes to meet the good faith efforts requirements without actual intent of DBE utilization.

Recommendation: A carefully designed process should be implemented to ensure that all contractors make good faith efforts to obtain DBE participation as subcontractors. A Good Faith Effort (GFE) Committee should be established to make a determination on whether good faith effort attempts submitted by prime contractors are valid.

The Committee should report quarterly to the Chief Contracts Officer on its findings. The Manager of the Civil Rights Office, or his designee, the Support Services Coordinator, and the External EEO Officer should be included on the GFE Committee. Among other things, the Committee should have the collective responsibility of evaluating and making determinations regarding good faith effort submissions.

At any time a prime contractor does not meet the DBE goal on a project and submits documentation of a GFE, the Civil Rights Office staff should make copies of the contractor's GFE documentation, and provide each of the members of the GFE Committee with a copy. In addition to reviewing the forms and documentation submitted by prime contractors in connection with waiver requests, the GFE Committee should evaluate the following:

- Whether DBEs that were contacted by the prime contractor were certified to perform the type of work requested by the contractor;
- Whether the response requirements provided by the prime contractor to the DBE subcontractors were appropriate;
- Whether a prime contractor made sufficient and legitimate attempts to negotiate in good faith with the DBE subcontractors, including discussions of alternatives to or assistance with bonding or insurance;
- Whether the prime contractor requested bids on the same scope of work from DBEs and the non-DBEs;
- All of the items set forth in the DBE Special Provision, Section 120.

The final decision of a majority of the five members of the GFE Committee is final unless the decision is appealed to the Chief Contracts Officer by the prime contractor. If the GFE is appealed, the decision of the Chief Contracts Officer is the final AKDOT&PF decision.

In addition to making good faith effort decisions, the GFE Committee should be empowered with the authority to address concerns by both prime contractors and DBE and non-DBE subcontractors that result from the submission and/or evaluation of good faith efforts requirements. For example, the GFE Committee should evaluate allegations that prime contractors are contacting DBEs just to obtain bids with no intention of utilizing the subcontractors and allegations that DBEs are not responding to bid requests.

The GFE Committee should establish and implement a graduated sanction plan for violations in connection with good faith efforts submissions.

The GFE Committee should regularly survey DBE firms on their work capacity to generate the most accurate information about DBE availability.

Finding: Prime contractors complained that the DBEs listed in the directory for a particular trade area either do not respond or indicate to the prime contractor that they do not perform work in that particular subcontract trade when contacted to provide a subcontract bid. Conversely, DBE subcontractors complained that prime contractors knowingly contact them to submit subcontract bids in areas they do not perform work.

Recommendation: As DBEs are no longer required to submit a recertification application every three years but rather now submit a "No Change" affidavit that does not provide information regarding subcontract trade areas performed by the DBE, the AKDOT&PF should establish a method for ensuring that DBEs are listed in areas that they provide services. For example, should a prime contractor receive written notification from a DBE subcontractor that the subcontractor does not perform services in an area that he is listed in the directory, the AKDOT&PF should contact that DBE subcontractor to verify the information and remove the DBE from that trade area if necessary. The AKDOT&PF should also contact all certified DBEs annually to verify the accuracy of the trade areas the DBE is listed. This annual contact should occur with the submission of the "No Change" affidavit. DBEs should be provided with a list of the subcontract areas they are currently listed under in the DBE directory and asked to confirm that those areas are correct.

Additional issues not resolved by updating trade information in the DBE directory should be referred to the GFE Committee.

Finding: Prime contractors indicated that contact information for DBEs in the directory is at times inaccurate.

Recommendation: As DBEs are no longer required to submit a recertification application every three years but rather now submit a "No Change" affidavit, the AKDOT&PF should establish a method for annually confirming contact information for DBE's listed in the directory. This confirmation should occur with the "No Change" affidavit. Also, should a prime contractor determine that the contact information for a firm is incorrect; the AKDOT&PF should immediately attempt to obtain corrected contact.

Additional issues not resolved by updating contact information should be referred to the GFE committee.

Finding: DBE subcontractors indicated that prime contractors only request their bids to meet the good faith effort requirement, not because of an intention to work with the subcontractor.

Recommendation: The implementation of a GFE Committee to review and make recommendations regarding the efforts submitted by prime contractors will address the above finding.

Finding: Several small DBE firms expressed frustration with the preferences that are given to large ANCs under federal programs. Under the current program, ANCs are given DBE status and are exempt from the personal net worth cap mandated for all other DBEs. Therefore, ANCs with gross revenues and capacities similar to the large Caucasian owned prime contractors are able to receive preference under the DBE goals program for work they perform as subcontractors.

Recommendation: The AKDOT&PF should amend its statutes to allow it to create a race-neutral Small Business Enterprises Program to encourage contracting with all small businesses, including DBE businesses. The Program should be limited to construction contracting companies whose annual gross income is no more than an average of $5 million per year over the last three years.

9.2.2 Compliance

There are several barriers to contract participation that exist because there is nothing in place to insure that compliance with DBE requirements is enforced after a contract is awarded.

Several DBE business owners expressed frustration because when issues of discrimination arise on the job site, they are provided no assistance from AKDOT&PF in addressing such issues. AKDOT&PF indicated that assistance with compliance issues is provided to DBEs when requested. However, according to several DBEs interviewed, when they attempt to obtain assistance from AKDOT&PF on issues related to performance of the contract, payment by the prime contractors, discriminatory treatment by prime contractors on the job site etc., they are often advised that there is nothing the agency can do to assist them.

Finding: The Civil Rights Office performs approximately ten compliance reviews per year and relies on the contracting officers and project engineers for all other contract compliance reviews and other issues, such as whether the DBE is performing a commercially useful function, of whether substitution of DBE subcontractors is performed in accordance with the federal regulations. The effectiveness of determining compliance with the DBE program depends upon the individual project engineers and/or contracting officers.

Recommendation: The responsibility of DBE contract compliance reviews and other compliance issues should not rest with the contracting officers and project engineers. Issues such as non-payment of DBE subcontractors, non-utilization of DBEs once projects have begun, racial and gender discrimination against DBE subcontractors on the project site etc., should be handled by establishing a compliance arm to the Civil Rights Office. This arm would have exclusive responsibility for compliance with the DBE goals set on projects and would implement the policies set by the AKDOT&PF. The persons responsible for these efforts should report to the Civil Rights Office Director. A member of this arm of the Civil Rights Office would serve on the Good Faith Efforts Committee. The compliance arm, among other things, would have the responsibility for overseeing the following:

- Insuring prompt payment of DBE subcontractors;
- Addressing contract disputes between prime contractors and DBE subcontractors;

- Monitoring utilization of DBE contractors once the contract has been awarded;

- Addressing issues related to discriminatory treatment of DBEs on project sites;

- Enforcing sanctions against prime contractors who violate DBE requirements.

Finding: Some DBE contractors feel that they have been discriminated against because of their gender or race while performing their subcontracts.

Recommendation: Refer all discrimination issues that occur on the contract site to the compliance arm of the CRO.

9.2.3 Professional Services Findings

Informal Procurements

AKDOT&PF has two types of procurements —informal and formal. These procurement types are used for the procurement of professional services. There are three classifications of informal procurements: purchases under $2,500.00 by use of credit cards, purchases between $2,500.00 and $5,000.00 and purchases over $5,000.00 but under $100,000.00 on FHWA projects (or less than $100,000.00 on FAA projects). Presently there are no DBE goals on any projects in this category and there are no consistent procedures utilized to promote use of DBEs on these purchases. From interviews with individuals responsible for retaining professional services, it is clear that minimal effort is used to procure DBE businesses. The lack of effort to procure DBE business owners is noticed by the DBE business owner. Several DBE business owners indicated that they were not aware of the person/department responsible for the procurement of the services they provide. They indicated that a mechanism that would allow them to meet face to face with the persons responsible for procuring their services would be beneficial. There are several policy changes that should occur to promote the utilization of DBE businesses in the informal purchasing categories.

Finding: The highest informal classification of purchases includes projects that are over $5,000.00 but less than $100,000.00 for FHWA (or less than $100,000.00 for FAA projects). These projects must be advertised in the AKDOT&PF website for at least 3 days. If FHWA or FAA funding is involved and the AKDOT&PF notifies any business of the procurement where at least one certified DBE is reasonably available, the DBE must be among those solicited for a proposal. However, this requirement is the responsibility of the contracting officer and there are no written procedures to verify that a DBE has been notified of such procurements. The Office of Procurement estimates that a DBE is contracted on a maximum of 10 to 15 percent of these purchases.

Recommendation: On all informal purchases the Civil Rights Office and the Regional Contracts Office should work together to develop written policies to be used in the solicitation of informal professional services contracts. The written policies should focus on the implementation of a SBE program for all informal contracts (see discussion of SBE program in Section 9.6.2). The written informal procurement policy should require procurement officers to document the efforts they have made to solicit proposals from SBEs and DBEs. The documentation should be forwarded to the compliance arm of the Civil Rights Office of AKDOT&PF.

An incentive program should be established to promote utilization of SBEs and DBEs. This incentive program should include employees' efforts to use SBEs and certified DBEs in the employees' performance reviews and should provide public recognition for the attempts of such employees to use SBEs and certified DBEs. The Civil Rights Office and the Office of Procurement should implement quarterly networking programs designed to provide SBE and DBE business owners with the opportunity to meet with procurement officers and project managers that utilize the services they provide. The networking program could be implemented in connection with the quarterly DBE meetings. The Civil Rights Office and Office of Procurement should also work together to establish a method to track the dollar amount of informal purchases made with SBE and DBE firms.

Formal Procurements

The classification of formal procurements includes professional services. The processes used by AKDOT&PF to procure professional services have not encouraged the utilization of DBEs. As a result, DBEs are severely underutilized. As noted above in the Goals Setting portion of these recommendations, The Wilson Group is recommending substantial race conscious goals in the areas of professional services. The findings and recommendations below address specific policy concerns that if addressed, should assist AKDOT&PF in meeting the recommended race conscious goals in the professional services areas.

Finding: DBE goals were never utilized on professional services contracts. However, prior to January 10, 2006, the Office of Procurement, in conjunction with the Project Manager provided points for utilization of DBEs on professional services contracts. The statistical analyses conducted in this study show that the point system that was used by AKDOT&PF prior to 2006 was ineffective. During the study period, the highest annual DBE participation on professional services contracts was in 2004 when DBE utilization of 2.38 percent.

Recommendation: AKDOT&PF should set DBE subconsulting goals for professional services contracts. The goal should be set using a process that evaluates the availability of DBEs for the specific scopes of work in the RFP. AKDOT&PF should establish a waiver process that includes a good faith efforts evaluation process for professional services similar to that in construction. The evaluation of the consultant's good faith efforts should be conducted by the Good Faith Efforts Committee. If a prime consultant does not meet the goals set or does not obtain a waiver of those goals, the consultant's proposal should be deemed non-responsive.

Finding: In selecting firms to perform on some professional service contracts, it was the policy of AKDOT&PF to rate three to five firms under a term agreement and to allow the Project Manager to select the firm it wanted to use out of the five when work was needed. Based on this arrangement, the highest rated firms were always chosen by the Project Managers and the firms that were lowest were never chosen. The term agreements could last for five years and could be extended for one additional year. Due to complaints by consultants that entered into the term agreement but were never used, AKDOT&PF implemented a pilot Innovative Term Agreement program whereby the five firms were rotated so that each firm had an opportunity to perform work for AKDOT&PF.

Recommendation: AKDOT&PF is commended for implementing the Innovative Term Agreement program. It appears to have increased utilization of all five selected firms. AKDOT&PF should formalize this process and implement a written policy to this effect.

Recommendation: AKDOT&PF should create a pilot rotating term agreement that includes only SBEs. Services procured using the Innovative Term Agreement should be reserved for small businesses based upon a program consistent with the SBE program outlined in the "Recommendations for all Agencies" below. The nature of these contracts is ideal for smaller firms and reserving them for SBEs would increase DBE utilization by using a race neutral method.

9.3 Municipality of Anchorage – Goal Setting

The disparity study conducted an analysis of availability and utilization of DBEs for the Municipality of Anchorage (Municipality) in the areas of construction, A&E services and professional services. Based on the data analyzed for the study period, the Municipality should set an overall DBE goal of 13.5 percent; 2.5 percent race-neutral; and 11 percent race-conscious.

9.3.1 Construction Contracts

Finding: The study found a statistically significant disparity between the availability and utilization of DBEs in construction contracts for African American-owned companies, Alaska Native Corporations, American Indian/Alaska Native-owned companies, Asian Indian/Pacific Islanders-owned companies and Hispanic American-owned companies ("minority-owned DBEs"). There are 13.92 percent ready, willing and able minority-owned DBE owned construction contractors and they received only 4.5 percent of the construction contract dollars.

Recommendation: Municipality should set a construction DBE goal of 14.0 percent for the minority contractors, 7.0 percent of which can be met through race neutral means and 7.0 percent of which should be race specific project goals.

9.3.2 Architectural and Engineering Contracts

Finding: The study found a statistically significant disparity between the availability and utilization of DBEs in architectural and engineering contracts in all DBE classifications, including African American-owned companies, Alaska Native Corporations, American Indian/Alaska Native-owned companies, Asian Indian/Pacific Islanders-owned companies, Hispanic American-owned companies and non-minority DBE women-owned companies. There are 32.4 percent ready, willing and able DBE architectural and engineering firms and they received only 1.2 percent of the architectural and engineering contract dollars.

Recommendation: Municipality should set a DBE goal for architectural and engineering contracts of 32.4 percent of which 13.25 percent should be met using race neutral goals and 19.15 percent should be met using race specific goals.

In light of the high availability of DBEs the Wilson Group suggests an incremental increase of race specific goals over the next five years. DBE goals should be set for the first year using 5 percent race-neutral and 10 percent race-specific. Each year the Municipality should review the utilization of A&E contracts to adjust the goals until they become close to the DBE availability.

9.3.3 Professional Services Contracts

Finding: The study found a statistically significant disparity between the availability and utilization of DBEs in professional services contracts in all DBE classifications, including African American-owned companies, Alaska Native Corporations, American Indian/Alaska Native-owned companies, Asian Indian/Pacific Islanders-owned companies, Hispanic American-owned companies and non-minority DBE women-owned companies. There are 13.04 percent ready, willing and able DBE professional services firms and they received only 1.5 percent of the professional services contract dollars.

Recommendation: Municipality should set a DBE goal for professional services contracts of 13.0 percent of which 2 percent should be met using race neutral goals and 11 percent should be met using race specific goals.

9.4 Municipality of Anchorage – Policies and Procedures

9.4.1 Construction

The Purchasing Department for the Municipality is responsible for the procurement of construction services, architectural, engineering, other professional services, general supply purchasing and general services. The Purchasing Department has eight individuals who are responsible for the different aspects of purchasing. Regardless of the service procured, the Municipality generally uses two types of procurement procedures: informal processes (for procurements estimated to be $50,000.00 or less) and formal processes (for procurements estimated over $50,000.00).

Informal Processes

Finding: Informal written solicitations are primarily used for small construction projects, services and supplies with lengthy specifications and other small but more complex requirements. Theses projects are estimated to be $50,000.00 or less. Under the informal process, three quotes should be solicited when practicable. There are no requirements to obtain quotes from DBEs on these procurements.

Finding: When smaller projects are determined not to be complex, other solicitations methods may be used such as telephone, facsimile or verbal. Whenever practicable, as determined by the Purchasing Agent, at least three quotes are solicited. The quotes received are evaluated and an award is made to the low responsive and responsible offeror with some preference given to local offerors. There are no requirements to obtain quotes from DBEs on these procurements.

Recommendation: Municipality should establish a SBE program and reserve where appropriate contracts estimated to be $50,000.00 or less for SBEs. Utilizing an SBE program should result in increased DBE participation using race neutral methods.

Formal Processes

Finding: For projects above $50,000.00, a formal procurement process is used. On these projects, at least one public notice of an invitation to bid is published in the Anchorage Daily News a minimum of 14 days prior to bid opening. The award is made to the low, responsive and responsible bidder and a local preference will be given when not prohibited by the funding source. The Purchasing Department encourages the use of D/WBEs.

Recommendation: Municipality should set project goals on contracts for purchase of goods or services for projects between $50,000.00 and $250,000.00.

Finding: On construction projects, the prime contractor is required to submit its list of subcontractors to the Municipality within five days after determination that the contractor is the apparent low, responsive and responsible bidder.

Recommendation: The Municipality should require the prime contractor to submit his list of subcontractors at bid. This would address the widespread complaint of DBE subcontractors that their bids are shopped after bid opening, by precluding prime contractors from negotiating DBE contracts after bid opening. This change would fix prime contractors obligation to DBEs at the time of bid opening.

Finding: The analyses conducted during this study show that during the study period, there were no architectural and engineering dollars awarded to DBEs.

Recommendation: Municipality should set DBE subconsulting goals for architectural and engineering contracts. The goal should be set using a process that evaluates the availability of DBEs for the specific scopes of work in the RFP. Municipality should establish a waiver process that includes a good faith efforts evaluation process for architectural and engineering. The evaluation of the consultant's good faith efforts should be conducted by the Good Faith Efforts Committee. If a prime consultant does not meet the goals set or does not obtain a waiver of those goals, the consultant's proposal should be deemed non-responsive.

Finding: The analyses conducted during this study show that the only year a DBE was used on a professional services contract was in 2002, where a woman owned DBE firm received 4.49 percent of the professional services contract dollars, even though 13.04 percent of the consultants that year were ready, willing and able DBEs that could have performed the professional services contracts.

Recommendation: Municipality should set DBE subconsulting goals for professional services contracts. The goal should be set using a process that evaluates the availability of DBEs for the specific scopes of work in the RFP. Municipality should establish a waiver process that includes a good faith efforts evaluation process for professional services similar to the one recommended in construction. The evaluation of the consultant's good faith efforts should be conducted by the Good Faith Efforts Committee. If a prime consultant does not meet the goals set and does not obtain a waiver of those goals, the consultant's proposal should be deemed non-responsive.

Finding: Municipality has a policy of providing plans for invitations to bid to WBEs and DBEs for half price on FHWA and FTA projects.

Recommendation: Municipality should continue to provide plans for invitations to bid for half the price but also consider putting them on the website so that no one is required to pay for the plans.

Finding: The Municipality considers self-performed work by a prime contractor when setting goals on specific projects.

Recommendation: Municipality should set project goals based upon availability of DBEs on work that can be subcontracted on the project, regardless if the prime contractor can self-perform the work.

Finding: Contractors are required to submit the names of their DBE and/or WBE subcontractors and the amounts of their subcontracts to Municipality no later than 3 days after the bid opening. This may result in "bid-shopping" after the apparent low bidder has been selected.

Recommendation: Municipality should require the contractors to identify the DBE and/or WBE at the time of bid opening. This would address the widespread complaint of DBE subcontractors that their bids are being shopped after bid opening. This change would also fix the prime contractors obligation to DBEs at the time of bid opening.

Finding: The Municipality of Anchorage (Municipality) has one individual who is responsible for administration of all facets of its M/WBE and/or DBE Program, including outreach to M/WBEs and/or DBEs. Presently, there is no formal outreach program

Recommendation: The Municipality should establish a formal outreach program. The Municipality should first survey DBEs to determine what programs would best benefit the DBE business owners. The municipality should consider implementing workshops to assist DBEs attempting to do business with the agency. There should also be regular networking opportunities for DBEs to meet the agency personnel responsible for procuring their services.

9.5 Alaska Railroad Corporation

9.5.1 Data Collection

Finding: The ARRC's data collection and monitoring of contracts and subcontracts does not provide sufficient information to analyze the utilization of DBE firms.

Recommendation: The ARRC must track all contract awards and payments to prime and subcontractors. All records should be maintained in a database that captures the data variables requested during the data collection process of the study. This should be applied to all business categories.

Recommendation: The ARRC should request assistance from the AKDOT&PF to develop a tracking and monitoring system to capture all contract and subcontract awards and payments.

Recommendation: Once a contract monitoring system is implemented, the ARRC should implement a race-neutral program for the next two years. After the two year period is completed, the ARRC should conduct a utilization analysis to determine if a race-conscious program is necessary.

9.5.2 Program Review

Finding: The DBE program for ARRC presently does not have a provision to re-evaluate the need for continuing a DBE Program.

Recommendation: In accordance with prevailing case law, ARRC should periodically review the need to continue the DBE program. It should conduct a subsequent disparity study timed with such review. According to the Federal Regulations, if an agency achieves or exceeds its DBE goal for two years consecutively for FTA or FHWA, it must adjust its race-conscious goals and utilize only race-neutral methods to achieve its annual goals until it becomes necessary to resume the use of contract goals to meet the annual overall goal. .

9.6 Findings and Recommendations for AKDOT&PF and the Municipality

The next group of findings and recommendations should be applied by AKDOT&PF and the Municipality.

9.6.1 Data Collection

Data collection is an important step of ensuring the accuracy of contract information and utilization participation on all Federally-funded contracts awarded.

Finding: Inconsistency exists in the data collection of all contract information and utilization data for contracts awarded to DBE and non-DBE prime contractors/consultants and subcontractors/consultants.

Recommendation: The AKDOT&PF and the Municipality should implement the following:

- Identify one (1) tracking system to collect and monitor all contracts and subcontractors for all Federally-funded projects;
- The tracking system should be maintained for accuracy with quality control checks;
- The tracking system must include all awards and payments to all (DBE and non-DBE) contractors.

9.6.2 Program Review

Finding: The DBE program is a federal program administered by the state DOTs, 49 CFR has within it the elements needed to ensure that the use of race-gender conscious measures are only utilized by the state when needed (e.g., annual review of goals includes an evaluation of the extent to which the use of race-gender conscious contract goals are needed to meet the overall annual goal).

Recommendation: Each agency should periodically review the manner in which it implements the DBE program to ensure that it remains narrowly tailored. Each agency should conduct a subsequent disparity study timed with such review. According to the Federal Regulations, if an agency achieves or exceeds its DBE goal for two years consecutively, it must adjust its race-conscious goals and utilize only race-neutral methods to achieve its annual goals until it becomes necessary to resume the use of contract goals to meet the annual overall goal.

9.6.3 Small Business Enterprise Program

Finding: Several small DBE firms expressed frustration with the preferences that are given to large ANCs under federal programs. Under the current program, ANCs are given DBE status and are exempt from the personal net worth cap mandated for all other DBEs. Therefore, ANCs with gross revenues and capacities similar to the large Caucasian owned prime contractors are able to receive preference under the DBE goals program for work they perform as subcontractors.

Recommendation: The AKDOT&PF and the Municipality should amend its statutes to allow it to create a race-neutral Small Business Enterprises Program to encourage contracting with all small businesses, including DBE businesses. The Program should be limited to construction contracting companies whose annual gross income is no more than an average of $5 million per year over the last three years, and consulting companies whose gross income is no more than an average of $10.5 million per year. If a company is a certified DBE and is within the above financial criteria, it should automatically qualify as Small Business Enterprise. Otherwise, a company must demonstrate that it meets the small business financial criteria.

The Small Business Enterprise Program should include provisions such as:

- Separating certain construction, and professional services contracts into smaller contracts reserved for bidding only by Small Business Enterprises;
- Creating a system to track all prime and subcontracts awarded to Small Business Enterprises;
- Providing outreach and supportive services for Small Business Enterprises;
- Creating a mentor-protégé program for Small Business Enterprises, including contractors, consultants and suppliers.

APPENDICES

APPENDIX A – DEFINITION OF TERMS

APPENDIX A - DEFINITIONS OF TERMS

This appendix provides explanations and definitions useful to understanding the Availability and Disparity Study. These definitions are only relevant in the context of the Availability and Disparity Study Final Report.

Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities (AKDOT&PF). The AKDOT&PF is the owner/operator of Alaska's federal and state highway system and is the state's primary recipient of FHWA funds.

Alaska Railroad Corporation (ARRC). ARRC was created by the State Legislature as a public corporation and instrumentality of the State within the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development. Its primary purpose is to provide transit services throughout the state of Alaska.

Alaskan Native Corporations (ANC). Businesses formed under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (ANCSA) of 1971 that is certified by the Small Business Administration 8(a) or Small Disadvantaged Business program.

Anecdotal evidence. Includes personal accounts of incidents, including of discrimination, told from an individual's perspective.

Availability analysis. Examination of the relative number of DBEs or MBE/WBEs ready, willing and able to perform work related to transportation construction and engineering work for NDOT or local agencies.

Business. A for-profit company, including all of its establishments (equivalent to "firm").

Business listing. A record in the Dun & Bradstreet database of businesses (or other database). A D&B record is just a "listing" until the study team determines it to actually be a business establishment with a working phone number.

Business establishment. A place of business with an address and working phone number. One firm can have many business establishments. (Same as "establishment.")

Contract. A legally binding relationship between the seller of goods or services and a buyer.

Contractor. The study team uses "contractor" to refer to firms performing construction contracts.

Controlled. Exercising management and executive authority for a company, per 49 CFR Section 26.71.

Disadvantaged Business Enterprise (DBE). A small business owned and controlled by one or more individuals who are both socially and economically disadvantaged according to the guidelines in the Federal DBE Program (49 CFR Part 26). Membership in certain race and ethnic groups identified under "minority-owned business enterprise" in this appendix may meet the presumption of socially and economically disadvantaged. Women are also presumed to be socially and economically disadvantaged. Examination of economic disadvantage also includes investigating the gross revenues and the firm owner's personal net worth (maximum of $750,000 exclusive of equity in a home and in the business). Some minority- and women-owned firms do not qualify as DBEs because of the gross revenue or the net worth requirements. A firm owned by a non-minority male can be certified as a DBE. Tribally-owned concerns can be certified as a DBE if the enterprise meets the requirements in 49 CFR Part 26.

DBE directory. The Alaska Unified Certification Program's electronic directory of firms certified as DBEs in Alaska. Also known as the DBE Vendor List.

Disparity. A difference or gap between an actual outcome and a reference point. For example, a difference between an outcome for one race/ethnic group and an outcome for non-Hispanic whites may constitute a disparity.

Disparity analysis. Comparisons of actual outcomes with what might be expected based on other data. Analysis of whether there is a "disparity" between DBE utilization and availability is one tool in examining whether there is evidence consistent with discrimination against DBEs.

Disparity index. Computed by dividing percentage utilization by percentage availability and then multiplying the result by 100. A disparity index of 100 indicates "parity".

Dun & Bradstreet. The leading firm in the United States and abroad that provides lists of business establishments and other business information (see www.dnb.com).

Employer firms. Firms with paid employees other than the business owner and family members.

Enterprise. An economic unit that could be a for-profit firm or establishment, not-for-profit organization or public sector organization.

Establishment. See "business establishment".

Federal DBE Program. Unless otherwise specified, "Federal DBE Program" refers to the Disadvantaged Business Enterprise program established by the U.S. Department of Transportation after enactment of the Transportation Equity Act for the 21" Century (TEA-21) as amended in 1998. The elements of the Program are set forth in 49 CFR Part 26.

Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). An agency of the USDOT that works with state and local governments to improve the safety and efficiency of aviation.

Federal Highway Administration (FHWA). An agency of the USDOT that works with state and local governments to construct, preserve and improve the National Highway System, other roads eligible for federal aid, and certain roads on federal and tribal lands.

Federal Transit Administration (FTA). An agency of the USDOT that administers federal funding to support a variety of locally planned, constructed, and operated public transportation systems throughout the U.S., including buses, subways, light rail, commuter rail, streetcars, monorail, passenger ferry boats, inclined railways, and people movers.

Firm. See "business".

Federally-funded contract. Any contract or project funded in whole or in part with FHWA financial assistance, including loans. As used in this study, it is synonymous with "federally-assisted contract".

Industry. A broad grouping of firms providing related goods or services.

Local agency. Any local government that solicits bids, qualifications or proposals for transportation construction or engineering projects.

Majority-owned businesses. For-profit firms not owned and controlled by minorities or women (see definition of "minorities" below).

Microbusiness. A firm that together with affiliates has average annual gross receipts of $2,750,000 or less over the previous three years.

Minorities. Racial and ethnic groups identified in the federal guidelines in 49 CFR Part 26:

- Black Americans (or "African Americans" in this study), which includes persons having origins in any of the black racial groups of Africa;
- Hispanic Americans, which includes persons of Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Dominican, Central or South American, or other Spanish or Portuguese culture or origin, regardless of race;
- Native Americans, which includes persons who are American Indians, Eskimos, Aleuts or Native Hawaiians;

Minority-owned business (MBE). A firm with at least 51 percent ownership and control by minorities. Minority groups are defined according to federal guidelines, as outlined above. For purposes of this study, a firm need not be certified to be counted as a minority-owned firm. Firms owned by minority women are counted as MBEs in this study (where that information is available).

NAICS code. North American Industry Classification System code that identifies primary line of business of an enterprise. www.census.gov/epcd/www/naics.html.

Non-DBEs. Firms not certified as DBEs.

Non-response bias. Occurs when the observed value to a survey question differs from what would be obtained if all individuals in a population, including non-respondents, answered the question.

Owned. Ownership of at least 51 percent of a company. A "minority-owned" firm is at least 51 percent owned by one or more minorities. (For DBE certification, additional guidelines are set forth in 49 CFR Section 26.69.)

Prime consultant. The professional services firm performing a contract for an end user such as AKDOT&PF, ARRC and Municipality of Anchorage.

Prime contract. The contract between the seller and an end user such as AKDOT&PF, ARRC and Municipality of Anchorage.

Prime contractor. The firm performing a contract for an end user such as AKDOT&PF, ARRC and Municipality of Anchorage.

Race-and gender-conscious. Remedies that apply to individuals or firms that includes some races and ethnicities and not others; and women and not men. This term is equivalent to "race- and gender-based". A DBE contract goal is one example of a race- and gender-conscious remedy. Note that this term is more accurately "race-," "ethnicity-" and "gender-" conscious. For ease of communication, the study team has shortened this to "race- and gender-conscious" remedies.

Race- and gender-neutral. Remedies that apply to individuals or firms that are not classified based on race, ethnicity or gender. Note that this term is more accurately "race-,"" ethnicity-" and "gender-" neutral. For ease of communication, the study team has shortened this to "race- and gender-neutral".

Race- and gender-neutral remedies may include assistance in overcoming bonding and financing obstacles, sampling bidding procedures, providing technical assistance, establishing programs to assist start-up firms and other methods open to all firms or any disadvantaged firm regardless of race or gender. (A broader list of examples can be found in 49 CFR Section 26.5 1(b).).

Relevant geographic market area. The geographic area that contains most establishments receiving AKDOT& PF, ARRC, Municipality or local agency transportation construction and engineering-related work, based on dollars. It is also referred to as the "local marketplace".

Remedy. A program element designed to address barriers to full participation for a particular group.

SIC code. Standard Industrial Classification code, which describes the primary business of a firm (see SIC Manual at http://www.census.gov/epcdlwww/sic.html). The federal government groups firms into industries down to 4-digit SIC codes. Dun and Bradstreet further classifies types of work to the 8-digit level.

Small business. In general, a firm with low revenues or employment size relative to other firms in the industry. "Small business" does not necessarily mean that the firm is certified as such.

Small Business Administration (SBA). The U.S. Small Business Administration, which is an independent agency of the United States government.

State-funded contract. Any contract or project funded in whole or in part with State of Alaska funds administered through AKDOT that does not include federal funds.

Statistically significant difference. A difference in which chance in the sampling process can be eliminated as a cause, at the 95 percent confidence level (meaning that chance in the sampling process could still explain the difference in no more than 5 out of 100 cases).

Subconsultant. A professional services firm performing a service for the prime consultant as part of a larger contract.

Subcontract. The contract between a prime contractor and another firm selling services to the prime contractor.

Subcontractor. A firm performing a service for a prime contractor as part of a larger construction or engineering project.

Supplier. A firm selling supplies to a firm as part of a larger project.

USDOT. U.S. Department of Transportation, which includes the Federal Highway Administration, the Federal Transit Administration and the Federal Aviation Administration.

Utilization. Percentage of total dollars of a type of work going to DBES or MBE/WBEs (or another group).

Women-owned business (WBE). A firm with at least 51 percent ownership and control by women. For this study, a firm need not be certified as a WBE or DBE to be counted as a woman- owned firm. In addition, firms owned and controlled by minority women are counted as minority- owned firms. Therefore, WBEs principally refer to firms owned by white women.
